

AIRMEN REPORT NO LIVES LOST, THREE MONTHS

(By Associated Press)
 RANTOUL, Ill., Apr. 21.—Not a fatality has been checked against the air service during the three months that have elapsed since Major General Mason M. Patrick, chief of the United States Air Service issued orders to the commanding officers of Chamute, Bolling, Langley, Mitchell, McCook and Selfridge fields to inaugurate regular scheduled flights over a model airway over the eastern and middle western states, according to records here.

The model air course takes in New York, Hampton, Va., Cleveland, Toledo, Detroit, Kokomo, Ind., and Rantoul. Each field dispatches a plane bi-weekly.

The records show that the first flights were not all completed on schedule time, but each trip has shown an improvement. A trip recently completed was from Chamute Field to Dayton, O., to Columbus, O., back to Dayton, to Moundsville, W. Va., to Washington to Cumberland, Md., to New York, back to Washington, to Moundsville, to Cleveland, to Detroit, to Toledo, back to Detroit, to Kokomo, Ind., and return to Chamute Field. The distance covered was more than 2200 miles and the total actual flying time was 22 hours and ten minutes.

While no aviator was killed, yet the flights were far from devoid of excitement and hairbreadth escapes.

Major F. L. Martin in a recent trip left Chamute on a route which covered 1800 miles. He was furnished with strip maps covering the entire route, but only for territory a few miles each side of the route. The only landing place between Zanesville, Ohio, and Washington is Moundsville, the remaining landscape being almost continuously mountainous. Being behind schedule, Major Martin tried a more direct route than that outlined and almost immediately ran into a strong headwind and dense clouds. He was blown off his course while flying over the mountains. After some time of aimless flying, trying to obtain his bearings, he suddenly realized his gas was getting low, his oil was almost gone, and that he had no place to land. He was rather high at the time and dropped down to try for a landing. Just before his gas gave out he saw a town and recognized it as Moundsville, his original objective. On landing safely he found he had only three gallons of gasoline left, and no oil.

Lieutenant Floyd A. Lundell started the only flight in the three months that was not carried out successfully, but fellow aviators look upon him as having a charmed life. His first mishap on his route from Chamute to New York was when a spark plug went wrong and he was forced down near Wheeling, W. Va. He repaired the damage and took off again only to find dense clouds confronting him. When he had climbed above them he learned he was out of oil. He again landed safely, replenished his oil tank and was off again for Washington. He arrived there a day late, but went on immediately to New York intending to make up time by returning to Washington the same afternoon. Lieutenant Lundell started from New York just before twilight and a strong wind almost immediately blew him off his course. He finally found himself on the edge of Chesapeake Bay fighting an outgoing wind. He was forced to land, but it was too dark to see the ground. He finally decided to go it blind and landed in a field, but Lady Luck had her hand turned the other way and he hit the only tree in the field. His plane crashed and was demolished, but the aviator escaped with a slight cut over the eye.

THE HOME GARDEN

WINNING OUT WITH ASTERS
 The rivalry among gardeners to produce the largest and fluffiest asters is one of the most interesting features of the garden season and cultural skill is the chief factor which must be depended upon to produce the desired results.

The selection of seed will in large measure tell the size of the flowers, relatively, as some varieties naturally are larger flowered than others. As a rule the later flowering types are larger flowered than the earliest. Asters will thrive in any soil which will produce good vegetables and they will repay any extra attention in the way of fertilizing. They also need cultivation all summer to be kept in unchecked and vigorous growth. Commercial fertilizer, particularly bone meal hoed around them at intervals of two or three weeks, is a great help.

The addition of wood ashes or air-slaked lime when the bed is prepared is coming to be considered an essential. It not only adds valuable fertilizer to the soil in the case of ashes and sweetens the soil and releases plant food in the case of the lime, and they that dwell therein." Opening hymn. Invocation. Congregational hymn. Responsive reading. The Lord's Prayer. Announcements and Offering. Morning hymn. Morning message. "The Field for Baptists is the World." This is Denominational Day for the Northern Baptist Convention. Evening service. Evening hymn. Evening prayer by the pastor. Song service. Special music by the chorus both morning and evening. Bible school at 10:00 with classes for all and an efficient corps of teachers and a cordial welcome for all who come.
