Suspicious Sets Used In "The Three Musketeers." Amazingly Exquisite Interior and Exterior Sets Enhance Fairbanks' Latest Picture.

Those who view Douglas Fairbanks' latest United Artists production, "The Three Musketeers," will be given a film tour of Paris as it was in the early seventeenth century...

"All told," said Robert Fairbanks, production manager and brother of the famous Doug, "we built 37 interiors and 40 exteriors, every one of them costing at least three times as much as any other set ever constructed on the Fairbanks' lot."

Perhaps the most unique set of all, however, is the ship in which Doug as D'Artagnan stages a terrific battle with Barbara La Marr as Milady for the royal jewels which she has stolen and which are the basis for one of the most interesting complications of the plot.

Lifting two acres of land bodily out of the valleys of the Cumberland mountains and planting it in the foothills surrounding Hollywood, Calif., is literally what was done by the Paramount company producing "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," a picture starring Mary Miles Minter, with Antonio Moreno, featured as leading man, which is being shown at the Arcade theater today and Tuesday.

The story of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," written by the late John Fox, Jr., deals with a family feud in the Cumberland mountains of Kentucky and Tennessee.

Even a barn with a hay loft and cackling hens, with stalls and cows and a nearby pen of logs, adds color to a scene beautifully reminiscent of the Cumberland mountains of East Tennessee and Kentucky during the post Civil war period.

On her return home her uncle kills a policeman, and Hale is obliged to arrest him for murder.
