Good For Yale Students

Last year 32 per cent. of the students of Yale University registered for term-time employment and in varying measure the demand was met. The highest earning was between $1,400 and $1,500 and from that they graded downward to less than $100. One hundred twenty-two had "eating jobs", by which is meant they earned their meals by waiting on table or doing other work in connection with the boarding places. The total earning of students amounted to $170,441.81.

That it was possible for students to earn so much while pursuing their courses of study doubtless enabled not a few to secure a college education in a great university who otherwise would have been unable to avail themselves of the facilities offered. Students who must rely on their earnings while in school to sustain them in whole or in part are likely to understand fully why they go to college. Those who will do any kind of work in order to earn their support will make the most of their opportunities for they know the source of the means that makes them possible.

It is remarked that those who earned over $800 are men of extraordinary qualifications, which is another way of saying that those who are well paid for their services, whether in college or outside, are those who can do something well. They were able to do what there was a demand for having done and for which not many could qualify. Employment in support of a college course is on the same basis as that which is remunerative after one leaves college. One must earn before one can command.

And what is done at Yale is but an illustration of the effort in other institutions of learning. A boy or girl who will work and make sacrifices, if need be, to get advanced schooling give evidence of initiative and independence which augur well for later life. If the great universities were exclusively for those of wealth; if the student eager to work to help himself through were denied the opportunity, the universities would fail in doing what they should do.

Tut's Policies

Excavations at Luxor have brought to light many details relative to Tutankhamen, his life and his affairs. But, according to students, much remains unknown—especially regarding his policies, what he stood for when on the throne.

Are his policies really unknown? The relics found in Tutankhamen's tomb bear impressive evidence as to his leanings. The hoarded wealth discovered there shows that he was no communist. The symbols of rulership that were buried with him bear testimony to his convictions as to the centralization of power and the rights of kings. The unearthed wine strainer indicates that he was anti-Volstead and the pictures of affinities on the walls of his tomb suggest that Puritanism did not dominate his policies.

Much may remain unknown relative to his policies, but much is easily inferred.

Somehow the truth is gradually reaching President Harding. That truth is that the farmers are in so desperate financial condition that they are not worrying about a World Court, but would like some domestic problems settled.

Governor Pierce scores the sugar profiteers. But all the scoring by governors will not count for as much as that buyers' strike of a few women.

Editorials From Over the Nation

JOURNALISM'S PATRON SAINT

Norfolk Virginian Pilot: The regeneration of this sinful world goes steadily onward and upward. Bar-tenders have disappeared from the earth and now the Pope has appointed a patron saint for journalists. St. Francis de Sales is the new patron of a vocation that for 600 years has worried along with a "printer's devil" and dared not hope or dream of the intercession of holiness. It is true that modern journalists have in expansive moments ventured to point to certain holy men of old as founders of their art. Moses has been cited as a reporter who told the biggest story that ever broke, the story of creation, in 600 words—an example of lucidity and condensation that city editors point out to every club. And Don Marquis will have it that Solomon was the first paragrapher, and the last, for no new thing under the sun has since been jotted down. But this has been more or less a straining of the point, for printing and publishing is a modern trade. It is fitting that a modern saint should become patron of the press. He was born in 1567 and was a man of radiant personality and great vivacity. He was a preacher as well as a writer, but what editor isn't? He was educated to be a lawyer, but turned from that trade to be a model of public opinion as a speaker and writer. And the outstanding quality of his preaching and writing was "simplicity, fervor and directness." How well that accords with the modern slogan of the local room, "Ferseness, Accuracy, Cut it Short!" Francis de Sales began the fight for this kind of writing as long ago as the founding of Jamestown. Surely a saint worthy to be the guide for all newspapermen everywhere.

It seems perfectly simple to Amos Tash. "The way to have others agree with you," he says, airily, "is to admit that you are wrong."

Cattle Rustlers May Be Run Runners Now

CALGARY, Alta., May 10.—Provincial cattlemen and law enforcement officers are now wondering if the picturesque cattle rustler of the western plains has vanished or whether he has turned to the more profitable business of run-running.

during 1922 for legal assistance in the prosecution of rustlers, this question has been occupying the attention of cattlemen and police officials. "It would seem," said President Riley in his report, "that cattle stealing was on the wane or it may be that other forms of law breaking are more profitable at the present time."

"Motor Gyping" Is Now A Popular Summer Sport

"Motor gyping" is becoming popular here according to automobile dealers of La Grande. They are receiving orders for special "bungalow bodies" that fit on all kinds of automobiles.

The state highways are filled with these odd cars, full of people perhaps "gyping" it from coast to coast at a total cost of the gasoline it takes to operate the machine, and the food they buy from the farmers. Several go through La Grande every week.
