

THE HOME GARDEN

What is home without a garden?

Take a chance with your first sowing of sweet corn. Sow an early variety at least two weeks before the farmers put in field corn in your neighborhood, and if weather is favorable even more start than this is advisable. Late sown corn is best, of course, but then the first crop means sweetest.

Golden Bantam, favorite as it is among home gardeners, is not the earliest. Cory and Malanoff are even earlier. In the west Early Iowa is esteemed and in the east Early Mayflower is a favorite. All these grow rapidly and mature before the stalks are very high.

These dwarf early varieties are ideal for the home garden and take much less space than the later and more robust sorts. The early varieties should be sown in rows instead of hills, which is advisable for the later kinds.

Plant in the richest soil in the garden two inches deep and thin to four inches apart in the rows. The rows should be two feet apart. As the young plants grow along they should be thinned to a foot apart for their best development when they have reached a height of six inches.

The rows may be thinned up slightly to give the auxiliary roots quick lodgment in the soil, as they are the anchorage for the stalk as it grows heavy.

Of all vegetables corn demands constant cultivation more insistently for its best development. It should be planted in squares instead of long rows in order to insure more complete pollination and well-filled ears. As corn is fertilized by the wind, there is great loss of pollen in the long single rows and consequently very many more ears which are only partly filled out. Planted in squares, rows only half filled out the length of the cob, or with bare spots upon them are rare.

Corn is one vegetable that must be home grown to be appreciated at its best. It must be freshly picked if it is to retain its sweetness and flavor. Held in the market for 24 hours, it is a vegetable of altogether different flavor. The sugar turns to starch in a chemical change which follows picking within four hours. Sweet corn should be picked not more than an hour before it goes into the kitchen. Ten minutes in boiling water will cook it.

SAY OLD POSEY IS LAST REBEL

(By Associated Press)

SALT LAKE CITY, May 16.—A recent Utah Indian outbreak in southeastern Utah, in the opinion of state officials, may be the last instance of fighting between the redskins and white that the United States will ever experience.

Chief Old Posey, said to be about 100 years old, and reputed leader of the renegade Allen Canyon band of Indians, is dead of wounds received in a skirmish with white possemen and his many followers have been ordered to farming land by the government that they may settle down to peaceful lives.

Ever since the coming of the first settlers to Utah in the '40s, Old Posey according to pioneers, has been an unwilling convert to the civilization of the white man.

Many years ago, redskins under Old Posey went on the warpath, Major General Hugh Scott, U. S. A., succeeded in restoring order.

All was quiet from that time until last March when with the arrest and conviction at Blanding of two young braves on charges of robbing a sheepherders camp, Old Posey and his followers again revolted. The two young renegades escaped from the Blanding jail and immediately white residents formed possemen to hunt for them and other members of the Allen Canyon band. There was a wholesale roundup of Indians and in Blanding a hundred wire stockade was erected and all Indians and their squaws whom Blanding citizens believed might join or lend aid to Posey's renegades, were taken into custody.

In the first skirmish between possemen and redskins one Indian was killed and several wounded. In a second clash another brave met death. Then United States Marshal J. Hay Ward, of Utah, went to Blanding and took charge of the situation. He personally took over the

Daring Debutantes as Bombers

These two New York debutantes flew over the city in an airplane throwing bombs into crowded streets. No one was injured. The bombs were circular for the Park Avenue street fair. The girls were Miss Dorothy McClen (left) and Miss Margaret Hennessy.

With the passing of Old Posey to the "happy hunting grounds," while residents in southeastern Utah are firmly convinced that there will be no more Indian troubles, for the aged chief was the acknowledged leader and his death left the renegades without a general.
