England Worried Over Emigration to America

LONDON, June 14.—Great Britain is worried over the increasing number of skilled artisans and domestic servants who want to take up their abode in the United States. The stream of emigrants which has flowed from these shores to America has caused a special committee of the government to inquire into the matter.

Only the exhaustion of the annual quota of British subjects eligible to enter the United States under the percentage law has prevented tens of thousands of others from pitching their tents under "The Stars and Stripes." With the exception of France and Germany, practically every nation is now barred from sending emigrants to America until next July, when the new annual quota begins. Already the summer bookings from the United Kingdom to America for July, August and September are full.

"America may still be the melting pot," remarks the Westminster Gazette editorially, "but its legislators are keeping a stricter eye upon the motley which go into the alloy than ever before. The British race is given a certain measure of factory in an evident disposition to welcome more of its members, but that is generally surprising when we discover that the people whom we send are in large measure domestic servants and skilled workers, neither of whom we can afford to lose."

There is a world need for "white collar men," an exclamation says; we suppose meaning men who can keep their collars white. Nothing goes without saying nowadays—Whatever it is, everybody says it. A man never realizes how inadequate his vocabulary is until he steps on a marble at 2 a. m. Observer Want Ads bring Results.
