Home from Extended Visit
 Mr. and Mrs. P. E. Lilly arrived home yesterday from an automobile tour of Western Oregon. They left La Grande three weeks ago in their American car and visited Portland, Corvallis, Salem, Eugene and Roseburg, besides many minor points of interest in the state. Their trip was a delightful one and both admit that Oregon becomes dearer to one when traveling by automobile because of the close touch one receives with country, scenery and the good people of the state.

Tourists From Florida
 A party, consisting of H. W. Molinoux and G. Grinley, both of Miami, Florida, are in La Grande for a few days, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. H. Pattison on N. Avenue. They are taking a five-months trip around the country and have already traveled 4750 miles. They have seen a great deal of country on their trip, but they say the Oregon Trail was the most beautiful ride of all, and that this valley was the most productive, especially with such fine cherries. They are well pleased with the excellent treatment they received during the entire tour, and will always speak well of Grande Ronde Valley. Mr. Molinoux is well pleased with the weather in this valley in the summer, but says he would rather be in sunny Miami in the winter where they can go bathing every day. They expect to tour through Oregon, also California and go back by the southern route.

Sam Comes Back to Say Hello
 Sam Van Dersal, known to every cattleman from Coos Bay to Imhaha, came into La Grande today from New York City. Just why a brand specialist—cattle brand—should be in New York City is explained by the fact that one time he invented a self-cleaning comb and he has been back there having the combs made and placing them on the market. Sam says New York is like a bee hive, business is fast and furious, so much so that he would not give a month in Oregon for a whole year in the metropolis. His comb is selling fine and he contemplates going to Europe with it in the near future.

GENERAL VILLA KILLED TODAY
 cause further fighting in Mexico meant intervention by the United States. It is time for peace." In a manifesto he praised the "good faith, honor and patriotism" of Provisional President de la Huerta and declared it was his purpose to show the Mexicans "build as well as destroy."
 The former bandit went with his family from San Pedro to Las Nieves, Durango, to "settle down" on his farm there and shortly after wrote to de la Huerta for school books and supplies. Villa was said to have been deeply affected by the death of a daughter in San Antonio, Texas, a month after his surrender. Sixteen of his men, who were among a number captured by Pershing and convicted of various offenses, were pardoned by the governor of New Mexico in November, 1920.
 "The first real tragedy in Villa's life occurred when General Philip Angeles was executed as a revolutionist by Carranza troops in 1919. Villa admired Angeles not only as a patriot and soldier, but regarded him almost as a father. He wept bitterly when he received word that Angeles had been shot. He threatened reprisals and later aided in the overthrow of the Carranza regime.
 Villa's real name was Doroteo Ocegueda. He was born in 1868 of peasant parents in the little mining town of Las Nieves. As a youth he followed the trade of butcher until the death of his father and then he and his mother and sister went to Western Chihuahua. There he became a cowboy. Many stories have been told as to how he became an outlaw but the most generally accepted is that it was because he killed a captain in one of President Diaz' regiments. Diaz then placed a price on his head. It was at this time that he changed his name to Villa. He organized a band of outlaws and became a terror to the rich land owners and mining men of Northern Chihuahua, robbing them and sharing the spoils with his followers and the impoverished peasants.
 When the Mexican revolution against Diaz occurred in 1910, Villa became a military leader in that movement. At one time he was arrested and sent to Mexico City by General Victoriano Huerta. He was condemned to death by a military court for insubordination. Huerta saved his life. Villa later escaped and fled across the Texas border.

 Huerta became dictator after Madero's assassination in 1913 and when Carranza revolted against Huerta in Coahuila, Villa re-entered Mexico to fight for Carranza and organize a campaign against the man who had imprisoned him. Peons flocked to his standard and he is said to have gathered an army of 25,000 men.

The farm population will keep on dwindling just as long as the city has a monopoly of high wages and high prices.
 Little countries that are not fighting for foreign markets seldom feel called upon to defend the national honor.
