Colt, Pirate Game Will Be Well Attended

Baker Expecting Largest Crowd in Queen City Baseball History; Both Teams Will Be Strong.

Next Sunday afternoon hundreds of frantic baseball fans from Baker and La Grande will gather at Baker to witness one of the closing games of the season—not only a post season game but one that will have a direct bearing upon the Championship of the Intermountain League which was thrown into a three cornered fight by the "Coke" squad's stunning Baker in the last regularly scheduled game of the season, automatically tying Cove, Baker and La Grande for first place.

the largest crowd in its history of baseball.

Which all appears that the Pirate-Colt scrap will have plenty of lookers-on and also indicates that the baseball spirit in the Queen City is at its high a point as ever before.

The Pirate line-up is being filled this week, several of the regular players having left the team for other points. Tex Knight, star third baseman, will not be likely to play due to an injury to his leg. The exact line-up will not be announced possibly until Saturday.

Several hundred La Grande rooters are expecting to motor to Baker Sunday to support the Pirates.

FAMILY OWNS ART TREASURE

Valuable Sixteenth Century "Mystery Painting" Hangs in Southern Shanty.

By Thomas E. Brown, International News Service Staff Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15.—In an old Southern negro shanty in historic Georgetown, on the banks of the Potomac, reposes a "mystery oil painting" of the sixteenth century. Nothing is known of the history of the picture. But, nevertheless, eminent artists have pronounced it to be a "real art treasure."

Francis D. Millet, a great artist, and Archibald Hill, military aide to President Taft during his administration, both of whom perished on the ill-fated Titanic when she sank in mid-ocean after collision with an iceberg, were deeply interested in the "mystery painting."

It was while returning from a mission to Italy in an effort to learn something of the history of the painting that Millet met his death. Fortunately, he was only carrying a copy of the original, else it would now be lost.

Owned By Negro Woman
The picture is now the property of Lizzie Smackum, colored. She inherited the painting from her sister, now dead, whose husband was a hotel porter.

They then lived at this hotel where Smackum was employed a little old lady without any too much money, whose name long since been forgotten. Time came when the little old lady's money became exhausted and she was forced to seek other quarters. Smackum helped strap her trunk.

This week, the little old lady said to the porter: "I am sorry I have no money to give you, but here is a painting; take it home and be careful of it; it is valuable." The porter, disgruntled, accepted it, and for many years it hung over a fireplace in his kitchen.

One day a life insurance collector noticed the picture and after examining it closely said: "I'll give you $200 for that picture, Lizzie."

But Lizzie, mother of 14 children, had not lived for naught, and replied: "If that picture is worth that much to you it's worth a great deal more to me."

Picture Restored
At this time Millet had his studio at Old Forrest Hall, in Georgetown, and the Smackum shanty was only a short distance removed. Lizzie, acting upon the advice of a white family for whom she was working, submitted the picture to him for examination. The picture then was so wrinkled and blackened that the figures portrayed were scarcely discernible. Under the deft, artistic fingers of Millet, however, the painting soon took on new color and meaning.

The picture when retouched by Millet portrayed a woman wearing a headpiece similar to that worn by Beatrice in the famous Greek painting seated on a flat stone. By her side is a jug of water. Resting on her knees with her head bent toward her lap, is a boy of about 8. Her hand rests on his head, and it appears she is bathing a wound in the child's scalp. From the wound pours a stream of blood and her hands are stained. Back of her stands a youth wearing manhood leaning on a staff and to his left a donkey, patiently watching the operation.

On the extreme right of the female figure is a lot of about ten years who seems to be explaining how the accident occurred. At the right of the wounded lad lies his hat and what is taken to be a slingshot. The supposition is formed that a stone battle had been in progress and one stone had found its mark.

Painting Unsigned
The painting is unsigned, the only mark of identification being a faded bit of paper pasted on the back of the stretcher with the words: "Giusto Manzoil, Pittore E—na Macchia-velli, Via Guiccardini, Firenze?" inscribed on it in almost illegible handwriting. This is thought to be the name of an Italian art dealer of the sixteenth century.

Millet offered Lizzie $200 for the picture, but advised her not to accept, as it was worth much more, but he was financially unable to pay more. Lizzie, because absorbed in establishing the identity of the picture, had it placed in many galleries in this country. It was an exhibition at the Corcoran Art Gallery in Washington at the time of his death, the Smackums reclaiming it shortly afterward.

Many artists have examined the picture and the consensus of opinion among them is that the painting is valuable and that it was undoubtedly a product of the sixteenth century. Recently Rush-Brown, nationally known sculptor, pronounced it an "art treasure" and if its origin can be established, extremely valuable.

VIENNA INVITES WORLD'S POLICE TO CONFERENCE

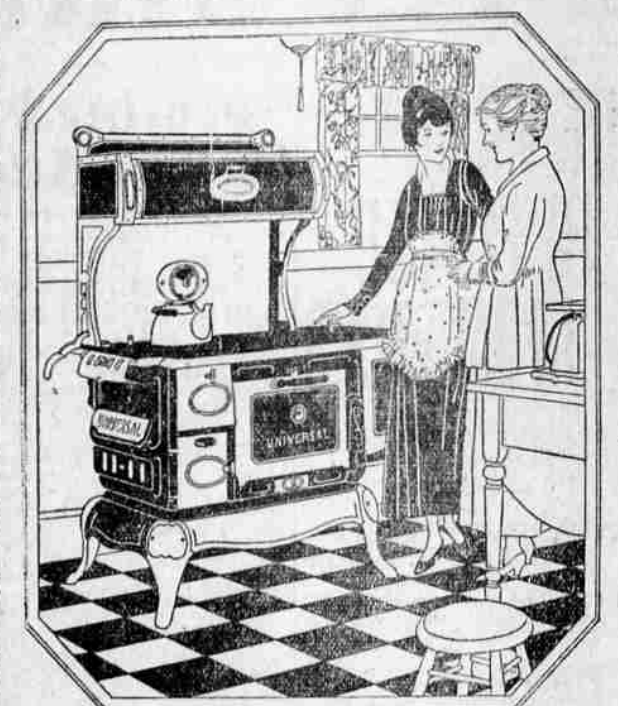

(By E. N. S.)

VIENNA, Aug. 15.—Policesmen from all countries are to be invited to participate in an international police congress to be held in Vienna this year.

The congress has been convoked by police-president Schöber, former Austrian chancellor, and is expected to deliberate measures for safeguarding the public against international gangs of check forgers, bank swindlers and money counterfeiter, while another object will be to facilitate extradition processes.

The creation of an international police bureau also will be considered.
