WAR AREA CLEARED OF DEADLY SHELLS

By Charles A. Smith.
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

LONDON. The battlefields of Northern France are returning to their pre-war appearance, and green fields are now taking the place of the battle scarred and trench-furrowed countryside, according to Fred N. Pickett, who has organized the breaking up of the huge dumps of ammunition and war material in France and Belgium.

The whole of Northern France has been cleaned up, says Pickett. Poison gas has been dissipated, and some 250,000 tons of material have been returned to commercial use.

"Each month for the past three years," Pickett said in an interview, "5,000 men have dealt with 1,000,000 shells, half a million grenades, and three-quarters of a million fuses representing the breaking up of 20,000 tons monthly.

"My organization's primary object in breaking up the ammunition was to extract the fuse from the shell.

"The shells were put in a crude cubicle," he said, describing breaking up operations, "buttressed with sandbags and railway sleepers, through which the end of the shell protruded, so the workmen could operate with special fuse tools. The fuse, having been extracted, the charge was then either washed or burnt out.

"Millions of rounds of ammunition and belts of charges for quick firing guns were dealt with by an appliance which ripped out the bullets and separated the brass case from the copper attachments, while a water sluice swept away the powder."

Picket thinks that the Allies and America produced much superior ammunition during the later part of the war, but says that Germany's TNT was perfect and never equalled.

MAN MIGHT BE A MERE MACHINE; CRILE'S BELIEF

By F. A. Wray,
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

LONDON.—Professor Crile, of Cleveland, Ohio, has given the International Congress of Surgery, in London, the shock of its life.

He put to those present a question that had never before entered their heads. He asked:

"Is man a mere electrical machine, controlled by his own chemistry?"

The query startled his audience. For one thing they had never expected the professor to abandon surgery for physiology. Also, such a suggestion had never occurred to them.

"I invite you," said Crile, "to regard the brain as the 'positive pole' of the human electric machine. I ask you to look on the liver as the 'negative pole' and the nerves as the connecting wires.

"The 'driving power' of the body," continued the professor, "must depend on the difference in brain and the liver. If this is diminished the 'driving power' will become less."

Dr. Crile went on to suggest that during sleep a diminished difference of potential— and hence a diminished driving power— is corrected. Emotions such as fear and anger, on the other hand, reduce driving power.

The actions of the "human machine," in fact can be corrected and regulated at will whether by means of chemicals—that is, anaesthetics, soporifics and stimulants—or of shocks that is, fright, insults, etc.

These circumstances of life and [illegible] can be corrected [illegible] on the lower [illegible] place of mechanical [illegible].

Dr. Crile claims that his theory explains many otherwise inexplicable phenomena of life. His belief is that examination of his conclusions may lead to the [illegible] revolution in the practice of medicine.

The address [illegible] with the closest [illegible] researches during the war and the conclusions he reached were the talk of every hospital in Europe. All the distinguished surgeons present were anxious to hear mor of his method of rendering operations "shockless."

and made contact with Smith and Richter's craft, lowering the pies and some sandwiches. Richter, standing in the cock pit, had grasped the bucket containing the pies when a sudden gust of wind caused the upper plane to nose up. For a few seconds Richter, clinging to the bucket, was literally suspended in midair. Captain Robert G. Ervin, piloting the contact plane, quickly whipped the nose of his plane downward and Richter settled back in his seat with the blackberry pies and sandwiches in his hands.

LOCAL BAND GETS PENDLETON JOB

Details of the consideration are not yet known as the contracts have not arrived here.

But, at any rate, with the selection of the La Grande Municipal band for the two most important jobs in Oregon in 1923, the state fair and the Pendleton Round-Up, it appears that the "band boys" have reached an attainment of perfection above other Oregon — and other northwestern bands.

ABOUT

One home run didn't make Babe Ruth. It took a whole flock of over-the-fence hits to win for him the title of the "swat king" of baseball. One good automobile doesn't ripple the surface of public prestige. It takes many cars and many models and many years to win the public's "O. K." Buick's acclaimed leadership has been well earned. Hundreds of thousands of cars and many models over a period of many years has established the new 1924 Buick as the Babe Ruth of the automobile industry. If you can't quite reach a new one, by all means choose a good used one—any model any year—there's no blanks—they all helped to accumulate the prestige that Buick today enjoys.
