American Women Outlive Men Is Fact Shown by New Survey

THE average woman of America outlives the man. And if she happens to dwell on the farm she is good for more years of life than her city sister.

These are the unusual, but irrefutable facts borne out by statistics now in the possession of the Phoenix Mutual Life Insurance Company of Hartford, Conn.

The above graph, which deals with units of city males, rural males, city females and rural females, each numbering 100,000, tells its own story.

The gradations down the side indicate the reduction of survivors at the rate of 5,000 for each line. Across the top is a scale of years, and the curving lines indicate the way in which we males and females die off. All that is necessary is to follow a downward line until it hits one of the arcs and then run your eye over to the total of survivors at that point. For example, at the age of fifty, there are 70,000 of the original 100,000 rural females surviving; about 68,000 rural males surviving; and about 57,000 city males surviving.

City dwellers die faster in the first five years of life, and the advantages of country life in those years are never overcome, as the graph shows. From the age of thirty-five to fifty the mortality among city males and females runs in parallel and at a slightly faster rate than the mortality of their country cousins.

and on that day Judge Edlin will hear motions. Beginning the following day and continuing until the does not is cleared, there will be jury trials.

Smokes One Brand Of Tobacco For 41 Years.

WINSTED, Conn. — Just what brand of smoking tobacco he uses is what friends of Dennis Ahearn, passenger conductor on the Central New England Railroad, are trying to learn. Conductor Ahearn says he has smoked one brand for forty-one years straight and thereby holds a world record. He has used various pipes.

HARVEST TARDY IN WALLOWA CO.

Heaviness of Grain Crop and Scarcity of Labor Is Reason for Delayed Work

ENTERPRISE—As the September rains have held off, day by day, the Wallowa county harvest goes steadily forward. Everywhere in eastern Oregon the wheat has been cut, thrashed and hauled to warehouses—in fact much has gone to mills or to exporters. This before this. But Wallowa county with its own climate and farm and labor conditions will be thrashing grain for 20 days to come.

Much wheat has been hauled to town warehouses and elevators, and teams and trucks are on the road all the time. This movement has only begun, however, and will continue, in all likelihood, well into the cold weather. Little grain remains uncut, but thousands of acres stand in the stacks, and great tracts have been, or are being, stacked.

The wheat will remain comparatively safe until the thrashers can get around to it. It will not be injured by fall rains or early snow, but in time will fall prey to mice which multiply amazingly around stacks.

The grain of the farmers in harvest lies in two facts. The grain crop is the heaviest for several years, and there is a scarcity of labor and of implements. Farmers generally have traded work in each neighborhood and this is anything but a fast system, as each man still has his home chores and other work morning and evening.

Many farmers have done what seemed impossible in the way of cutting and stacking grain with little or no help. A father and son have cut 200 acres of wheat, oats and barley and much of it is in the stack. The son of the household have done the chore and cared for the stock.

Even more than that has been done by Eugene A. Houck on his farm in the hills east of town. He then he stacked 150 acres of wheat and 25 acres of oats. Then he stacked it and now he is stacking it. The first of this week he had three stacks finished and was working on the fourth. In all this work he has had no help whatever, except for a few days that his wife worked with him.

binding and shocking went all right though one man could do, and he has not been able to start fall seeding as he would have liked. The cause is typical of the fall and sacrifices of farmers, particularly in the hills.
