Neighborhood Club Honors Teachers

More than one hundred and thirty women of the city took part in a special affair of unusual interest at the Country club, roomed last Saturday afternoon, when the teachers of the public schools were charmingly entertained at a Kennington card party by the Neighborhood club, through a committee capably headed by Mrs. Joseph T. Richardson.

The beautiful color effect provided by the Halloween decorations lent a spirit of hospitality and good cheer that was heightened by the graceful musical numbers given by Miss Catherine Campbell and Mrs. George Huntington Currey, whose vocal selections were enthusiastically received, and by Mrs. Florence Lynch Miller, who entertained with her usual charm on the violin.

Following the presentation of prizes to Miss Effie Snider, who excelled at cards and Miss Nina Kane, surpassing all competitors at an intelligence game, a two-course luncheon was served.

After the serving of refreshments considerable time was spent in pleasant conversation and the forming of new acquaintances.

The Young Ladies Sunday School class of the Baptist church will have dinner at the home of Mrs. McAdory, 806 N. avenue, at six o'clock Friday evening. Each member of the class may bring a guest and everyone is requested to be present.

E. church or call 315-W.

Over thirty young people spent a very enjoyable evening at the Christian church last Saturday evening. The entertainment took the form of a Book Party and all were dressed to represent the title of some well known book of fiction. The girls, Tom Sawyer, Frodo and many other notables were there in full regalia. Near the close of the evening very unusual refreshments were served as a welcome climax to an evening of fun.

The Loyal Sisters of the Christian church will meet tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at the home of Mrs. C. E. Bussey, 2905 Oak street. Japanese Gowns.

Paris. (I.N.S.)—The story of the fall fashions is like an interesting bit of geography. There are chapters on Egypt, Persia, Russia and China. But the very latest one is on little Japan. The recent catastrophe has brought her to the front page and Paris designers are showing collections that make one think of rare old books with charming Japanese prints.

Some dressmakers are now using the Japanese sleeve. It is called the "pagoda" sleeve and is high along the upper part of the arm until it flares out at the wrist in a bell shape. It has infinite variations with colored linings, and is going to be Donnet uses the Japanese touch in his embroidery, which comes in gorgeous colors. One that he calls "pagoda" is embroidered with old temples of the little kingdom. It is cut on straight lines and has a scarf collar that is unique. The material is white crepe with a draped tunic and belt of gold embroidered flowers.

Luelle is showing a charming yellow pagoda frock which has a trimming of long tassels and another blue and silver model embroidered in green dragons.

Another designer is showing a number of frocks that suggest the Japanese influence in their flowing winged panels on the bodice and their delicate embroidery. Many are embroidered with lovely Japanese landscapes, tiny ponds and bridges, ladies with fans and wooden abbeys. For these he is using blue crepe satin, a favorite autumn fabric which lends itself gracefully to these Japanese frocks.

The butterfly bow in the back is another sign of the Japanese influence which makes a unique decoration.

Tanlac Stood Test When Others Failed

"Tanlac relieved me of stomach trouble after everything else had failed, and I can't say too much for it," declared Miss F. Amick, 505 Sixth Street, Portland, Oregon. "For years I had indigestion. I finally got to where I didn't feel like working or doing anything. I didn't have any appetite at all, suffered from constipation all the time, and always felt so tired and groggy it seemed that I had no energy at all. I tried everything that was recommended to me, but nothing did me any good.

"Finally I started on Tanlac, and on my first bottle I noticed a big change. I kept taking Tanlac and kept improving, until now I am in better health than for years, and feel full of life and energy all the time. My appetite is fine, and work doesn't tire me any more."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 37 million bottles sold.

L'ENFANT, NEW PROBLEM PLAY, AROUSES PARIS

Author of 'Damaged Goods' Offers French Writers Some New Material.

By ALICE LANGELLER, International News Service Staff Correspondent.

PARIS—The author of "Damaged Goods" has just presented another problem play to Paris audiences. "L'Enfant" (the Child), by Eugene Brieux, is another play of the forbidden fruit type which is furnishing French journals plenty of spicy material for their dailies.

The heroine, a young feminist of the 19th century, is a victim of the fashion and sometimes a part of the skirt drapes. Francis puts a stunning black bow on an orange crepon gown and beads the ends of another black satin.

Thirty years, Pierette Nider, is a graduate engineer, the soul of a large factory which her brother-in-law directs, afflicted by an invalid mother and sister who are a bit old-fashioned but beloved by her small niece, the child of her sister, who gradually becomes jealous of this affection. An obscure little professor of a ripe age, who has suddenly made a fortune, would like to marry Pierette, but she refuses on short notice. She has a weakness for her young cousin, Henri, who seems to care little for her in return because he finds her ideas a bit ridiculous. This is all for the first two acts.

"I am thirty, and I have not yet found a husband, because there are not enough men to go around and because I am too intelligent," says Pierette, "but I do not intend to dry up and wait for death. No husband—c'est-à-dire (no child)—to this I will not submit. A husband, after the war, is something very difficult to find, but a child—nothing easier. I do not intend to grow old, heart and arms empty."

In the third act we learn that she is to have her wish. Now she will have something to live for. The child will belong to her alone. The father, she says, does not count in these modern days of matriarchy. And when the young cousin, Henri, repentant, offers to marry her she refuses flatly, and only her old-fashioned family succeeds in persuading her to accept a father for her child, for its sake alone.

"A noble and pathetic subject for a play," writes Gustave Tery in "Le Courrier." "Unfortunately it is too bold for even Monsieur Brieux to treat. It should not be a question of preaching a bad example and then finding excuses for it. What must be done is to show to the Parisians of reputation the real condition of a country where there are three wives for every man. It is no longer a vaudeville, but an alarming drama."

Hunters Get Two Deer
