Nominated to Office—William Houghan of La Grande and Verne Newson of Rivera, Calif., have been nominated for sergeant-at-arms of the sophomore class at O. A. C. Their election will take place at the next class meeting. The sophomores have decided to entertain future class meetings by music, talks by campus celebrities and other special features. It is thought this will make class meetings more interesting and encourage a larger attendance. Plans are progressing rapidly for the sophomore cotillion, the big sophomore dance of the year.

SURVEY COSTS WILL BE BORNE ON EQUAL BASE

(Continued from page 1) The boring of Oregon's different projects and he had turned them to their present standing. Emphasis was laid on the work he had done in behalf of the Baker project. Mr. Sinnott responded to the introduction in a most pleasing manner expressing his pleasure at being permitted to attend a luncheon with so many Union and Baker county people. His main theme was irrigation and he surprised many present by a very good way by pointing to the possibilities of government aid in putting water on the soil of the Grande Ronde valley. He took up the two projects—Meadowbrook on the west and Catherine creek on the southeast. The procedure needed to get these projects before the department, he stated, is to petition the government asking for a survey at the same time pledging one-half the cost of that survey. "If this is done by the people here," said the congressman, "I promise you that it will receive attention and that every effort will be made to push the matter forward."

One thing that has balked irrigation projects recommended favorably by the government in old established counties like Union has been the land owners who would not sell their lands. The department has made a ruling that no man can hold title to more than 160 acres of irrigated land when the government has anything to do with the project. To bring this condition about the secretary of the interior puts a price on the lands over that amount of acreage belonging to any individual and as soon as possible they are sold. "Underland," said the congressman, "this does not mean that any low prices are to be put on land for values are regulated by the present condition of improvement and the price lands have been selling at without irrigation, neither does it mean that the government will permit any large land owner to sell at a fancy price based on contemplated government irrigation."

It was made plain to everyone present that the Grande Ronde can first of all get the government to share half the expenses of survey and investigation; that if such investigation proves that an irrigation project is feasible that estimates of cost will be rendered and the government construction; that agreement must be made among large land owners to sell off all but a quarter section of their land when watered; that the project could then be constructed under government plans and specifications. Revelation to Many. It was revelation to many to know that such a plan could be carried out in an old community like this for the first thought relative to irrigation combines it with desert lands that otherwise would produce nothing. However, the discussion was free for the luncheon indicating that the idea was one worthy of deep consideration and every business and professional man left the table with a view of the future of this valley as outlined by Congressman Sinnott that he had not possessed before. The latter part of the congressman's excellent address was devoted to stories of suspensions in the national congress and no more pleasant than those given in years by La Grande men than they enjoyed during Mr. Sinnott's speech yesterday. Edward MacLean, head of the Oregon Retail Merchants Association spoke briefly on the chapter of that organization which he is planning to establish in Eastern Oregon. Congressman Sinnott before leaving last evening stated he expected to start back to Washington, D. C. about the 15th of the month as by that time he will have finished a complete visit of all the Second district. He has spent some time in each community learning its needs and the desires of its people.

BRITISH WARSHIPS BREAK UP TRAFFIC IN RED SEA SLAVES

LONDON (AP)—Although the slave trade is commonly supposed to have been suppressed all over the world, two British warships, the Colnath and the Cornflower, have been engaged in suppressing this traffic in the Red Sea for the last two years. Not only have they succeeded in stopping most of the Red Sea slave trade, but they have also stopped gun-running which was occasionally attempted. High prices are paid for slaves in this part of the world, who are generally captured from the coastal tribes and sold to the Arabs, who take their victims inland. A communication from a member of the crew of the Colnath tells an interesting story: "We had spent a period of two years in the Red Sea," he says, "with our very varied scenes of tropical life, and experiencing the almost intolerable heat of two summers. The duties of the two Red Sea ships are primarily to frustrate the diabolical bartering of humans which unfortunately still continues to a much larger extent than one is led to believe. "On one occasion a show was detained which had been thus trading, but it is to be regretted that the occupants successfully evaded capture, and carried away with them the gold they had received for their slaves. "It was, however, an exciting incident, for when we first tried to board they opened fire on our whalers. This necessitated the latter returning to the ship, and we eventually fired about eight rounds at the escaping crew. "On another occasion a show was captured full of slaves, boys and girls between the ages of seven and 17. "It was heart-rending to stand by and see the hungry miles ravenously attack the bread we gave them. The show's crew endeavored to escape by jumping overboard and swimming ashore, but were successfully captured, and hopes are entertained that they got their full deserts."
