Tea Given Honoring Mrs. Wortman

One of the many beautiful affairs given in honor of Mrs. H. C. Wortman of Portland, was a delightful 12 o'clock luncheon given by Mrs. A. T. Hill, at her home on First street.

The dining room was exquisitely decorated in gorgeous chrysanthemums, and a delicious five course luncheon served, with covers placed for eight. A lovely hour was spent and both the hostess and her guests proved themselves very charming in every respect.

Several friends of Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Foley, former residents of La Grande but now living in The Dalles, have received invitations to attend a dancing party to be given in The Dalles city auditorium on Tuesday, November 27th, at 8:30 o'clock. Dr. and Mrs. Thompson Colvert, Dr. and Mrs. Walter W. Hart and Mr. and Mrs. J. Bruce Kilmore are assisting in this event with Mr. and Mrs. Foley.

When the ladies of the Presbyterian church gave a tea at the home of Mrs. A. T. Hill yesterday afternoon, Miss Kathleen E. Mrs. H. C. Wortman, who so beautifully entertained the members and guests of the Neighborhood club Tuesday afternoon, left Wednesday morning for her home in Portland. Mrs. Wortman was the house guest of Mrs. E. P. Mossman while in this city, and it was a great honor to La Grande women to have a woman like Mrs. Wortman as a guest and speaker.

Mrs. Wortman on leaving La Grande yesterday morning expressed her great joy and appreciation for the wonderful entertainment given her while in this city.

Materials for Tailor-Mades.

Paris. (L.N.S.)—Whatever the weather the smart Parisienne insists that the tailor be in the most suitable garment for morning and street wear. And in spite of announcements to the contrary, the tailor-made costume has become so important that the great textile manufacturers of France are creating fabrics designed especially for it, embodying the character, texture and surface most favorable to this type of garment.

There is kasha from the large home of a tailor, without doubt one of the smartest fabrics of the season, which is replacing the good old standard serge. It has one great advantage over this time in the fact that it doesn't grow shiny with wear.

Then there is marokkaine, which comes in both bordered and plain materials. Velour de Smyrne is another tissue which is much used for afternoon costumes. It has a soft velvety surface, with the sturdy quality of wool, which is its composition. It is very useful for a smart costume in the new dark green shade called "corduroi." Philippe & Gaston use it in tobacco-brown, with buttons for the trimming and buttonholes of blue leather. A dull blue leather belt completes the costume. This velour also comes in plaids and stripes.

Worth is using a great amount of velvet, trimming it with fur for the more elaborate occasions of the afternoon.

There is famous for her knitted tricotee costume, because she incorporates into them all the fashionable features of the cloth tailor. Many of the costumes have charming borders woven into them, giving the same effect as embroidery.

Famous French Recipes

Calves Liver Butterflies.
Paris. (L.N.S.)—Calves liver is coming back with the cold weather. For a very attractive dish fry calves liver butterflies.

Brown four slices of liver in a spider. When almost cooked oil some heavy white paper and put into each little "butterfly" a small thin slice of fat bacon, barely cut chopped shafflots. Place on top of this a slice of liver, more of the herbs and another slice of the bacon to cover it all. Fold the paper all about and put the little packets into a moderate oven. Serve with the paper.

MACHINERY HELPS PARIS HOUSEWIVES

By Alice Langler, International News Service Staff Correspondent.

PARIS.—The Housewife's Salon has opened its doors at the Champ de Mars to show the pretty Parisiennes that all should not be drudgers here below.

Until within the last few years French women have not had an easy life in the home. Their houses are old fashioned, their working utensils as well, and if they are not lucky enough to have a servant or two their housework would deplete most of the day. Inventors have put their busy brains to work so that the woman of the house should no longer be a slave to her work.

Now she will be able to sleep an hour longer in the morning if she is careful enough to prepare her coffee an half the night before and place it on the alcohol lamp. When the alarm clock goes off it lights the lamp at the same time, and the coffee is ready when madame appears. No more red hands from washing dishes. Madame piles them in a neat machine, presses the button, and whiff!—they wash themselves. She presses another button, and they are dried.

Brooms are now taboo. The future French housewife will have nothing but vacuum cleaners and brushes—long ago widespread in America, she knows little of their wonders.

Crowds look wonder-struck about the stand of electric washing machines—a far cry from the little wash houses on the banks of the Seine where the washerwomen scrub the linen with stiff brushes and beat out the dirt with hard paddles.

For forgetful cooks and newly-weds there is a remarkable "rotisseur," so monsieur will have no more burned meats. The most goes into one compartment of an ingenious apparatus and the vegetables into another. Madame sets the hands of the clock at the hour when the cooking should be finished. At the hour indicated the contact is automatically cut off, and the roast comes out "just right."

The grand attraction is the "triangle" salon, where white-topped chefs watch over the frying of fish and potatoes as dear to the stomachs of French people. This apparatus is not for the small housewife, but for the fair at ports and seaside resorts, where this frying of fish is an important industry. Each apparatus is heated by gas, so that the oil does not cool off. One large basin is for the fish, another for the "bread fried," it is capable of turning out 400 possible in an hour, none too much for big fetid days and mornings at the Plein Air on the outskirts of Paris.

Further on are the housewives' "little helpers"—a machine to press trousers, another to open buttons, one to reach shelves, another to count the paces and sing the advertisement. The day is certainly coming when the French housewife will be able to dispense with her troublesome servants, and all will be done "mechanically."

CLASSES LIPSTICK WITH BOLSHEVISM
CINCINNATI, O., (L.N.S.)—Are lipstick sticks as bad as bolshevism? Beverly Bond, professor of history at the University of Cincinnati, believes that the red of the lipstick is as dangerous to the study of American history as the red of bolshevism is to its realization and that the battle of knowledge can be won without powder.

"The women of America of two or three generations ago, the professor admits, may have powdered their hair but the women of today, who attend his classes are not permitted to powder their faces—at least while attending his classes.

"Of course," Professor Bond told a class in American history recently, "I need hardly say that I am very much opposed to lipstick. I want you to put on all the makeup you need, but do it before coming to class. I realize that it is a tragedy if your powder needs powdering before class is over, but you'll have to make the best of it."

Nothing is more disconcerting to a teacher, he said, than to try to store a girl's mind with facts concerning the American republic while her hands are employed in manipulating a powder puff and looking glass.
