Mother:
HERE'S YOUR OPPORTUNITY TO SURPRISE DAD WITH A MICHAELS- STERN OR LANPHER OVERCOAT AT $42.50

You know he would love it—and we know we have the identical coat.

A Michaels-Stern or Lanpher Ulster—just a little brighter in color and snappier in cut than he would buy for himself.

Why—it would take him back to your wedding day and the trip to Niagara Falls.

It would give his step—youthful his poise and on Christmas morning he'd leave the house with his head a little higher—his chest a little fuller and his cigar a little tilter than he had for years.

We say $42.50 because at this price we can show you coats you want in models that want for nothing. Speak to the family—it's our idea but it's your opportunity.

has not been good of late but he is able to be around now and meet his friends.

Gone 25 Years—Albert Coffin, who made his home at Union 25 years ago, but now residing at Hardin, Montana, is in the Grande Ronde valley this week renewing former acquaintances, making new ones and visiting relatives. He spent several days in Klamath early this week visiting relatives and is in La Grande today.

To Attend Funeral—P. J. Black, of La Grande, left last evening for Saint Anthony, Idaho, where he will attend the funeral of his brother, Walter, who for many years lived in La Grande.

Here on Legal Business—Dr. C. T. Samuels, of Baker, and Dr. G. E. Holt, of Pendleton, osteopathic physicians, were in La Grande yesterday, having been summoned to testify as expert witnesses before the circuit court.

Receive Grapefruit—Mrs. Herbert Pattison received by express yesterday, two and one-half dozen first class grapefruit from Miami, Florida. They are of the largest variety and arrived in La Grande in good condition.

Out After Illness—The many friends of Mrs. Herbert Pattison will be pleased to hear that she is able to be about again after a two months' illness during which she has been confined to her home.

Liquor Not on His Premises—Leonard J. Smith, recently convicted for possession of liquor, did not have the liquor on his premises, according to announcements made that corrected a misunderstanding that many people had in connection with the case. Smith was arrested between his home and La Grande.

Here on Business—William Pollman, of the First National bank of Baker, spent a few hours in La Grande yesterday on business. He had been in Portland for several days and came to La Grande on passenger train No. 24. His private car met him here and he returned to Baker over the Oregon Trail.

Over from Union—Dr. O'Connor was over from Union yesterday looking after his real estate holdings in La Grande. The doctor is one of the oldest practicing physicians in Eastern Oregon. At one time he was located in Baker county and did all the practice for the mining camps in the Cornucopia country where mining was at its height. His health sponse to the business-like cablegram, which President Roosevelt said later had been prepared but never sent. The Sultan, fearing the destruction of his city, had paid the ransom.

The kidnapping of Perdicaris was not the first instance of such a service by which Rainsull attracted world-wide attention. One of his earlier victims had been Walter R. Harris, a correspondent of the London Times, who was captured and held for a ransom of 10,000 pounds in 1901. Harris at first refused to allow payment of the money, but was subjected to so many indignities that he finally capitulated. One of his most grown-up experiences while a captive was to awake one morning and find a headless body, dressed in his own clothes occupying part of his little shelter tent.

Rainsull's next important captive was Raul General Sir Henry Maclean, a Scotchman who was serving as commander of the Sultan's body guard. Next to the Sultan himself, Maclean was the most powerful and influential man in Morocco. Believing that Rainsull was in a mood to make peace with the authorities, he had arranged a meeting with the bandit and was commissioned to take him some presents from the Sultan. Rainsull sent a guard of 15 men to escort leged offense against the Sultan's authority.

In character, he seemed to possess all the traditional cruelty of his Moorish race, especially in dealing with his enemies, yet he was known to display genuine sympathy for a child in trouble and was noted for his kindness to animals.

Mr. Perdicaris, who wrote a detailed account of his captivity in the hands of Rainsull, said that he "really grew to like the man." He was at once so gracious and disinterested, not to us alone but to his own wild adherents," the writer continued, "that I discovered to my consternation I was beginning to accept his contention that he was not a mere brigand of cut-throats, but a patriot struggling to rescue his Berber followers from the tyranny of the corrupt, chieftain officials."

Another side of Rainsull's character is told in connection with the capture of a Alaska officer. It seems that he had no grudge against this particular officer, but was bitter against the British, therefore he arranged to sell his captive to some tribesman whom the man was alleged to have wronged years before. Having paid Rainsull his price, the purchaser sat in the room in which Rainsull was seated and where the whole transaction had taken place in the presence of the victim, who well knew his fate.

This occurred in 1907, when the bandit was at the height of his lawlessness. During the next few years he became such a menace to law and order that the Spanish Governor-General, realizing that he could not subdue his influence, decided virtually to take him into partnership with the constituted authorities by appointing him governor of the Tangier district and of the city of Tangier.

Following the World war, however, the Spaniards finding that they were unable longer to sponsor the extortionate demands of the governor ousted him from office and drove him back to his native hills, once more on outlaw.

Rainsull, like many of his noted bandit predecessors, was prone to maintain that he practiced brigandage purely in the interest of the weak and oppressed, and that he robbed the rich in order that he might better relieve the poor. Despite this explanation, there is no record that his charitable benevolence ever extended beyond the limits of his own little following.

Although he was a peaceful farmer in early life, he claimed to be of noble birth, and frequently produced ancient letters purporting to establish this contention. His career as a bandit began following his escape from prison in 1882, when he was 26 years of age. He had served five years, much of it in a torture chamber, for an al-

Used Cars

A dollar saved is a dollar made. It's not what a man makes that counts—it's what he saves that counts. New automobiles will always be sold as long as the public is willing to pay for the latest-out trills and knock-knocks. The wise buyers—the economist, prefer a Used Car—a good one, because of the saving price over a new car. Good Used Cars—the ones which represent a genuine saving price, are sometimes like men—you've got to know them through and through in order to determine their real worth. Our Used Car Buyer's Service is the searchlight by which you may know our Used Cars through and through—inside and out—the acid test which will prove the economy of "Ask the Envelope" cars.

are not as prosperous.

"These portions, of course, include only a fractional part of the total farming area. The fruit grower and cattle raisers appear to be the most unfortunate. The wheat farmer on the whole has not had a prosperous year. In a summary of the agricultural conditions of Idaho, Montana, Oregon and Washington, it is held that the crops were better than last year, the wheat harvest the largest in the history of the northwest, the production of livestock and fruit set at record. The dairying and poultry raising is on the increase.

Cost of transportation, however, consumed a large part of the farmers' profits.

The apple crop in Oregon and Idaho was large but prices were not as high as in previous years, mainly because the markets were unsatisfactory.
