BRITISH WOMEN OUTLINE PLANS

Despite Political Policies, Parliament Members Will Unite on Social Campaign.

By CHARLES J. SMITH

LONDON (INS).—Great Britain's eight women members of the House of Commons, although of different parties and diametrically opposed to each other on most political questions, mean to unite in combating social evils and on questions vital to the home.

This was decided upon by them at a dinner given to them by the Women's committee, welcoming them to parliament, at which they made speeches concerning their trials and tribulations as members of parliament, and their hopes of what they will be able to do for the women of the country.

Lady Astor, who has now the nickname of "Mother of the House of Commons" as the first woman member, told in a witty speech of her trials and warned her new "children" that, above all, the one thing they would need was an unfailing sense of humor.

"Whether or not I should wear a hat was one of my first trials," said Lady Astor. "I soon discovered, however, that if I had not worn a hat I should have shocked most of the male members as much as if Lady Godiva herself had appeared."

The Duchess of Atholl, a new woman member, confessed that the question of wearing a hat had been her great fear, and it was with a great sense of relief that she had found that the new Labor women members had settled the problem for her by appearing without headgear.

"I do so like to work with my head uncovered," she confessed, Lady Torrington admitted that, although she knew "one's hair does get awfully untidy," she would like to dispense with a hat also.

The speeches foreshadowed close co-operation between the women members regarding all matters vital to feminine Great Britain. Lady Astor, speaking for the Conservatives; Mrs. Wintington for the Liberals; and Margaret Bondfield for the Labor party, stated that they would endeavor to cooperate, putting together their separate causes in the matters of housing and infant welfare.

Miss Bondfield, affectionately known among the Laborites as "Our Maggie," stood on her chair to speak and showed all the fervor of an ardent social reformer. With flushed cheeks and blazing eyes, she declared that England could show an example to the whole world.

"Fundamental changes will shortly take place," she declared. "They will show, as history has shown previously, that fundamental changes can take place without violence and without bloodshed."

From all the impressions and signs coined at the gathering, the male members of the House of Commons are going to have a heated and trying time at the inauguration of the women, who, although only eight in number, show that what they lack in numerical strength they can make up in oratory and sarcasm.

Hard Working Thief Stilled at Large

BERLIN (AP)—Aided by his small stature, a dwarf known as Fritz has been making a good living by robbing baggage cars.

It was Fritz's habit to slip himself in a trunk, comfortably lined, and provided with enough food and drink to last a week. In baggage cars or in freight sheds, alone and at night, Fritz would emerge, rifle trunks, and take the best of the loot back to his own box. Another trick was to change the destination addresses on trunks the contents of which were valuable, sending them to a con- federate.

The police have the box, but Fritz is still at large.

Every druggist in this county is authorized to say to every rheumatic sufferer that if a full pint bottle of Allenru, the sure conqueror of rheumatism, does not show the way to stop the agony, reduce the swollen joints and do away with even the slightest twinges of rheumatic pain, he will gladly return your money without comment.

Allenru has been tried and tested for years, and really marvellous results have been accomplished in the most severe cases where the suffering and agony was intense and pitiable and where the patient was helpless.

Mr. James H. Allen, the discoverer of Allenru, who for many years suffered the torments of acute rheumatism, desires all sufferers to know that he does not want a cent of anyone's money unless Allenru decisively conquers this worst of all diseases, and he has instructed druggists to guarantee it as above in every instance.
