Mix Gives Fans a Real Treat at Star.

of the Forest," with Tom Mix, opened at the Star Theatre last night and the intrepid, athletic actor gave his fans something to talk about. Tom kept his audience almost breathless in a series of thrilling episodes that, while covered of the flavor of Mix's entertainment dishes, yet were anything but his usual attempts. In this instance, after an encounter with a band of timber thieves, Mix is virtually caught on a log which is blown up. He escapes from a break neck cliff, falls from Tony in an airplane, and falls from an overhead wire. The film actors have grasped the leaders of airplanes, but Mix's jumps into the air, and from the axle of the landing plane, which is traveling, he should judge, eighty miles an hour, and is lifted a hundred feet as if on a trapeze.

The Eternal Three Tailed as Great Story.

Marshall Neilan wrote himself a bit of a story when he sat the plot of "The Eternal Three" down on paper. It is his second picture for Goldwyn and when screened at the Arcade theatre last night, it held the audience as they are seldom held by a motion picture. It is the author-director's tribute to the physicians and surgeons of the world, showing how they must free themselves from private feelings in the practice of their profession.

The story concerns a famous surgeon, Dr. Walters, whose young wife became too much interested in her husband's fascinating but neglected son, Leonard. She goes to elope with him, but the boy is injured and only a brain operation can save him. The surgeon has learned of the affair but does not tell his wife. He can free all three from the horns of the dilemma upon which they are impaled by giving an operable vein to the mate which he welds in the operation. You must see the picture for yourself and find out for yourself what he did and how he won back his happiness. There are thrills in the film, and comedy, and excellent acting. One of the famous "Mix-ups" best achievements.

"The Virginian" Coming to Sherrys Theater Soon.

Actors, risking life and limb and even death in the taking of realistic scenes of the big picture, pass through exciting moments registered by the camera but never shown to the public, according to Tom Forman, who filmed the Preferred Picture, "The Virginian," coming to the Sherry theatres. Hazardous scenes mean numerous failures before they are performed in a manner suitable for the public eye and it is in the failures that the actors have the narrow escapes.

Here are a few "exciting moments" in the making of "The Virginian" that proved a trifle more than exciting to the participants. Kenneth Harlan shot himself accidentally during the street dual scene, in which as the Virginian, he kills "Trampas," a cattle rustler. Production was halted for a week pending his recovery. Harlan also received a ducking in a rushing mountain torrent when his horse stumbled and fell. Florence Vidor narrowly missed death, when, as "Molly Wood" she took the ride in the old stage coach driven by a "drunken" cowboy. One of the wheel horses fell in a dash to a dangerous ford, injuring the horse and nearly upsetting the vehicle. Director Forman would not allow her to ride in a second time. The story concerns a famous surgeon, Dr. Walters, whose young wife became too much interested in her husband's fascinating but neglected son, Leonard. She goes to elope with him, but the boy is injured and only a brain operation can save him. The surgeon has learned of the affair but does not tell his wife. He can free all three from the horns

"Call of the Wild" Film Wins Instant Approval.

For the aspiration to preserve upon the screen possibly the most widely read of Jack London's books, "The Call of the Wild," Hal Roach is to be commended; for the ownership of so beautiful and noble a creature as Buck, he is to be congratulated.

That numerous admirers of London and the wonderful animal he analyzed so vividly, sympathized with his "romantic ambition" was evidenced by the crowded houses yesterday at the Sherry Theatre. That many approved the manner in which he has caught the story was shown by applause at intervals.

The production follows the life history of Buck from the time he is presented to some children as a pup on Christmas day to the end, where he mates with a she-wolf in the Klondike.

Buck is the inseparable companion and protector of children and a pampered pet in a rich household. Walter Long, the villain, steals Buck, clubs him into submission and sends him to the Klondike.

Salem Churches Unite.
SALEM, Ore. — The Christian Federation of Salem, representing practically all of the churches of the city and many other organizations, was formed at a meeting here. The purpose of the federation, it was said, is to assist in the improvement of moral conditions here. Ronald Glover was elected president of the federation. There were reports that the organization would take an active interest in politics this year and might endorse a county ticket.

Sheepmen are Hopeful.
BEND, Ore. — Central Oregon sheepmen are looking forward to one of the best seasons in recent years. A price of 40 cents a pound is expected for wool, following the contracting of several Lake county clips at 29 cents.

Baker Enrolling Infants.
BANKER, Or. — With 40 members of a necessary $8 already enrolled, the formation of an industry company of Oregon national guard in this city has been nearly completed. Organization of the local company will be completed by Sunday, say those who are sponsoring the move.
