"Gold Madness," At Sherrys, Is An Absorbing Melodrama.

All dressed up in the new title, "Gold Madness," the screen version of James Oliver "Cowboy" Huddy's "The Man from the West," began its two-day engagement at the Sherry theatre yesterday. Guy Bates Post is cast in the leading role of Jim Kendall, alias Calgarth, the hero who with infinite patience waits and plans and works for ten or twelve years to right a most grievous wrong.

Playing opposite the star is lovely Gene Darmond, one of screen's most beautiful blondes, and a most talented actress as well, and her winning personality is a most admirable foil for the virile Post. Mitchell Lewis, as Scotty McGee, gives his usual inimitable characterization, and Cleo Madison, as his wife, Olga McGee, does some of the finest work of her screen career. Truly this is a cast of which any producer might be girl who masquerades as a man and lives for months among the "he-men" of the African wilds. In order to play the role Miss Nilsson had her hair closely cropped and underwent special treatment at the hands of an expert masseuse to obtain a form apparently masculine.

"The Bat" Hailed as Greatest Play of the Day.

"The Bat" by Mary Roberts Rinehart and Avery Hopwood, which Wagenheim and Kemper will present at the Arcade theatre on Saturday, is said to be the greatest play of its kind and, there are plenty of theatrical men who will tell you that it is quite likely to prove the greatest play of any kind ever to be produced. "The Bat" is not a picture.

Now all of this is admittedly a strong statement and a large order for anything to fill. Great as "The Bat" is, there are certain to be some who will raise a protesting eyebrow and observe that an over-enthusiastic press agent has undoubtedly allowed his typewriter to run wild. The best proof to offer of the truth of the seemingly wild statements are the facts. The reader may draw his own conclusions and the observation may be permitted here that those observations will undoubtedly approximate the first statements made here.

"The Bat" ran for more than two years in New York. It ran for more than a year in Chicago. The play holds the long-run record in Boston and Philadelphia. It was the first and only play ever to run for four consecutive weeks in Baltimore and has since returned on two different occasions for additional engagements.
