FRENCH FAVOR LIBERAL GROUP

PARIS, (A P).—The French

electoral campaign has been waged in greater political confusion than has existed in the country since, just after the fall of the Second Empire, a royalist parliament was sent to Paris to inaugurate the Third Republic.

Party lines are so broken and party politics are so vague that political prophets are at a loss to find a basis for any sort of predictions. The only certain element in the situation is that for several months the pendulum has been swinging toward the left, that is to say in favor of the more liberal parties, Radicals and Socialists, and against the moderate and conservative government majority.

All the special election held since last fall, including parliamentary, city and departmental, have shown large gains for the Socialists and Radicals. Local circumstances entered into some of the results, but on the whole they are accepted, even by the moderates and conservatives of the "National Block" as showing a decided tendency toward radicalism and socialism.

The Radicals and Socialists, however, have big gains to make if they win the majority of the chamber from the "National Block," which in 1919 won 125 seats from them and constituted a government coalition of 400 members in the lower house, in spite of the fact that the Radicals polled 2,000,000 votes as compared to 1,800,000 in 1914, and the Socialists increased their votes of 1,400,000 in 1914 to 1,700,000. The Radical and Socialist coalition, however, will not go to the country with the full strength of the parties as polled in 1914. The Communists have sapped a great deal of the strength of the Socialist party. Only the result of the coming election will show just how many votes the Communists have taken, but surface indications are that the faction which takes its orders from Moscow will not in the neighborhood of 1,000,000 votes. This would leave the Socialists with about the same number, supposing that the two factions together show a small gain over 1914.

The Radical party also has been weakened by the resignation or exclusion of a number of deputies who supported Poincare's foreign and fiscal policies. Those men have formed a new "Radical Federation," which will cooperate with the other groups of the government majority.

The strength of the different groups in the present Chamber is as follows: Republican Democratic Alliance (National Block) 170; Independents, mostly royalists, 27; Deputies belonging to no group, 22; Republican and Social Action, 47; Republican Left, 56; Republican Right, 32; Radicals, 82; Socialists, 50; Communists, 13.

Practically all the parties, excepting the Communists, Socialists, Radicals, Republican Socialists and a few Republicans of the left, were in the government majority and were claimed as part of the "National Block." The full strength of the Chamber was 626, but a number of seats were vacant and some deputies not inscribed on any list. The next Chamber will contain only 584 members. The Radical-Socialist coalition must win 115 seats from the government majority in order to gain control.

LABOR PARTY TO HAVE ITS EXCLUSIVE CLER

LONDON (INS).—The labor party, following in the footsteps of the Conservatives and the Liberals, has started a semi-exclusive party club of its own.

The club will be first an experiment for three years and $10.00 is being spent on rent and structural alterations.

Unlike the other party clubs membership will be open to members' wives.

One thing the scientists have shown is that the first million years have been the hardest.
