"Puritan Passions" Scores at Sherrys Theater.

"Puritan Passions," the latest Holliston picture, starring Glenn Hunter and which is the fourth of his pictures under the Film Guild banner, was warmly received last night at the Sherry theatre.

The story deals with Salem witchcraft in the days of Puritan rule and tells of how Goady Richards, a belle of the town, avenges a wrong brought upon her by Goady. Wiggate, the town's justice, who hides his sins behind the cloak of his position; how at the death of their child Goady gives herself over to the study of witchcraft despite a proclamation of the Governor fixing a penalty of death on all those and the relatives of those convicted of "possessing the Devil"; how Goady and Old Nick convert a corn-patch into a graveyard into the semblance of a country gentleman of the period; how they dispatch this semblance, which they call Lord Ravensbane, to play its part by winning the hand of Wiggate's ward Rachel in order to bring Goady to the gallows and how, while during the wedding ceremony, Ravensbane discovered his image in the Mirror of Truth, which reveals the true self of those who stand before it and finding himself but an animated scarecrow, refuses to go on with the marriage. The climax in entrancing. Through the great love Ravensbane bore Rachel he finds a soul, the spell of Old Nick thus being broken and he dies a man.

hit of the past season? "The Galloping Fish" is faster and funnier and that's saying a lot. There's a trained seal playing the title role of the new production. His name is "Freddie" and as a comedian he is second to none. That seal is so intelligent he is un-learned and the tricks he pulls on the screen are as funny as they are spectacular. The producer, not satisfied with a star who is a whole show in himself, surrounded him with a scintillating cast of the cleverest "comics." Louise Fazenda, playing the role of an innocently ensnaring "Diving Venus," Syd Chaplin as a timid little secretary who accidentally gets all entangled with "Venus," Ford Sterling, trying to boss the whole show as the manager-fiancee of "Venus," Chester Conklin swelling the chorus of laughter in a double-faced, taxi driver rejoicing in the name of "Jonah"—they'll keep you laughing from start to finish and make you wish there were fourteen rests instead of seven.

"Where Is This West" Coming to the Star Thursday.

The settings for Jack Hoxie's latest Western starring vehicle add to a small Middle Western town to a Western cattle ranch and the location of the star changes from that of a milkman to a rancher.

The Universal cowboy star will be seen in one of the fastest action plays in which he has yet appeared, in "Where Is This West" which comes Thursday to the Star theatre.

It is a satirical comedy drama built around the adventures of a poor milkman who becomes joint owner with a waitress of a large Western cattle ranch. His life is made rough before he starts West, but when he gets to the little Western hamlet, near which his ranch is located, he has more adventures than were accorded Daniel Boone.

The story was written by George C. Hall, of the Universal scenario department. George E. Marshall, who directed "Don Quickshot of the Rio Grande," Hoxie's initial starring feature for Universal, guided the filming of the play.

A strong cast supports the star, including Mary Philbin, Universal's latest "find" as an emotional actress, who has the feminine lead in the play.

Others in the cast are Joseph Grand, Bob McKenzie, Sid Jordan, Slim Cole and Bernard Selgit.
