Distinctive

A very unusual cape that is a part of the frock on one side and quite detached on the other makes this gown of almond-green silk with satin overplata distinctive. The wide flat band of braiding running from shoulder to hem line is most effective on figured material. The cuff almost covering the hand is a fashionable touch.

Carrying the contrast between the keynotes and their view-points still further, one observes that Burton never has been blessed with a nickname. Christened Theodore, no one ever has had the temerity to call him "Teddy" or "Theo."

No one, on the other hand, ever calls Senator Harrison anything but "Pat." Few of his colleagues in the Senate, in fact, know that his name isn't Pat, as an abbreviation of Patrick, but is his own personal condemnation of the political cynicism he followed by his parents—Byron Patton.

Harrison developed his "speaking voice" during the Spanish-American war when he sold the Memphis Commercial Appeal in his home town. "Pat Harrison's voice, raised in the rebel yell as he called his papers, always brought the whole town outdoors to learn what new catastrophe had befallen the Spanish forces.

Pat figured later that he probably killed off the entire Spanish armies about three times, during that brief war. But he always said his papers. After school at Crystal Springs, Pat attended Louisiana State University, where he studied, waited table in the mess hall and pitched baseball. After graduating, he signed up as pitcher for one summer with a semi-professional ball team at Pickens, Miss. Pat's ability to "cut the plate" verbally, in the Senate, is perhaps the natural evolution of his knack of "outing" 'em across" with the horseshoe sphere in these days. In baseball as well as in oratory, Pat "put smoke on 'em" and the boys on the receiving end needed gloves.

After a brief term in law at Gulfport, Harrison was elected to the House of Representatives in 1910. After eight years in the House he moved up to the Senate, taking the seat of James K. Vardaman.

In the Senate he has been the leading Democratic sniper and his

New York.—The scarf of today in some instances is as big as an old-fashioned shawl. One effective style is in a light color, brilliantly strewn with flowers, while a deep border at each end is dark green, navy or black.
