CHERRIES ARE LEFT ON TREE

(By C. E. Sperry) The cherry crop in this section of the state has been left on the trees in the Willamette valley because the growers found it impossible to pick them, owing to the fact that the birds were eating them as fast as they were picked.

Like many other farm products, cherries are left on the trees because they have to wait for the market to open. This means a situation whereby the fruit will rot on the trees if it is not picked in time.

and resulting fair profit prices. The cherry situation has become a serious one for the growers. The farmers produce cherries every year but the birds are eating them as fast as they are picked. There is a possibility in this case of a serious shortage of cherries for the market. The growers are looking for a way to protect their fruit from the birds.

An international co-operative in the United States is the first of its kind. It is a co-operative of farmers and growers of various crops.
