Hoot Gibson Shows Cavalry What Real Riding Is.

Thrills and laughs in a combination new to films—and entirely new to Hoot Gibson, erstwhile cowboy star, in "Hoot Gibson Shows Cavalry What Real Riding Is."

A Universal-Hoot Gibson special production of army life, founded on the story by Gene Markey, and to be seen at the Star Theatre, Saturday and Sunday.

Gibson plays the part of a young army lieutenant, commissioned through influence of his father, who, arriving at a cavalry camp on the Mexican border, is put through a "course of instruction" that, ranging from falls off a horse in action to a thrilling rescue, filled with gun runners, mingling with armaments, with army department and army etiquette, every situation turns out to be a laugh and a pretty romance runs through it.

Rides over the desert in which whole cavalry troops appear, Indians and other sensations furnish the suspense. Gibson holds the play as probably the best he has ever had.

An Andy Gump comedy will also be shown.

Wild Stallion Coaxed To Blacksmith For Shoeing.

"Chick" Morrison, Hal Roach's chief horse trainer, has a certain professional respect for Andreux, but he doesn't trust him as much for Morrison was the first man to successfully get a set of horseshoes on Rex, the magnificent stallion that has the stellar role in Hal Roach's unique pathos-drama feature production "The King of Wild Horses."

Morrison and Fred Jackman, director of "The King of Wild Horses," found Rex a captive outlaw in Colorado when they were seeking an equine star for the picture. Rex was chained in a stable and was lamed by the lonesome handled pickpocket in the stable. He needed shoes badly and every blacksmith offered the job for a man-eating shark. Rex had already worked most of the blacksmith shops in that neighborhood. He wouldn't have been any more popular if he had had smallpox. Morrison spent four or five days trying to make friends with the stallion. He was severely bitten, kicked and pawed in the process, but he gradually began to win the animal's respect. Rex learned that Morrison wasn't afraid of him. He also learned that when this man told him to do something it was best to do it. This knowledge came, not through fear, but through the judicious use of raw rope, turns of anger and other things that Rex, in all his wild life, had never known before. Rex

"Comedy showing 'No Laughing.'"

"Bluff" at Arcade Friday and Saturday.

"Bluff," the new Sam Wood production for Paramount which will be the attraction at the Arcade Theatre Friday and Saturday, is a story of a pretty young girl designer who goes to New York to earn a living. She does so. Her method is bluff. Agnes Ayres and Antonio Moreno are featured in the production which was adapted to the screen by Willis Goldbeck from the magazine short story by Rita Weiman and Josephine L. Quill.

Miss Ayres plays Betty Halliwell. She is down to her last dime and has a brother, invalided in an automobile accident, on her hands. Betty searches without results for work when she hits upon the bright idea of impersonating a courtier internationally famous beauty. Nina Loring, whom she greatly resembles. Now the contracts for her gown designs fairly come pouring in, while, as Betty, the mediaeval wouldn't even favor her with an interview.

But Nina Loring is wanted in London for embezzlement. Red Cross funds. Betty is arrested, out Robert Fitzmaurice, (Antonio Moreno) attorney for the people in London, sees through Betty's ruse, and, although he doesn't know her name, is sure it is nothing crooked. He takes over her defense, bluffs a politically controlled deputy of police into his way of thinking and—but that would be telling too much of the story.

"Bluff" has been produced with a light comedy touch and is a most novelty, as picture entertainment goes.

E. H. Calver, Clarence Burton and Fred Butler head the strong supporting cast. Others are Russell Karns, Jack Gardner, Pauline Laquer and Arthur Hoyt.

A little Fox News is also on the program.

Aspirants for Office Source. Hoot Gibson, Ory. Although candidates must file this month.
