New Coogan Film at Sherrys Abounds In Wholesome Humor.

A motherless boy rendered still more fatherly by the death of his father, a gallant member of San Francisco's police force; an aunt, in far off Australia, bidding the boy come to her; weeks of adventures on a tramp steamer bound for the Antipodes; a freight train rushing back and forth in the path of the ship; a wreck in the "sundering floods"; an escape as notorious as that of Robinson Crusoe; an island of the South Seas, wave-washed and jungle clad.

Also a trifle of maniacal savages hunting for the lives of erect overcoats; an intrepid boy, transformed in the superstitious imagination of the cannibals into a little white rod of water; a rescue, almost miraculous, in the dimly lit, a voyage back to his home town aboard a speeding destroyer of the United States Navy, and a welcome at the hands of the San Francisco police force such as was never before seen in the city famed for its hospitality and entertainment.

Best Comedy Offering.

It is hard to predict the public's verdict, but when the measure of all of Jackie's contribution to the screen is taken, this will be appreciated as Jackie's most effective comedy offering and the most prolific of laughter.

Jack Coogan, Sr., under whose personal supervision the picture was made, is to be congratulated on his choice of this Willard Mack story, written expressly for Jackie, and on his selection of Eddie Cline to direct the story in his humorous unadorned.

Also showing "Among the Missing."

A World Tour For a Few Cents, Arcade's Offer.

Touching four countries and dealing with three continents, the story told by Sam Wood's latest Paramount production, "The Next Morning" is so starkly knit by dramatic action that the spectator is scarcely conscious of traveling over thousands of miles of sea and land.

The story opens in France. In turn it deals with the Argentine, Spain and the United States, returning once more to France. In its picture form, "The Next Morning" offers an elaboration of both book and stage production by Kate Jordan.

The picture deals with the situation which arises when a man and his wife, devoted to each other, are separated by the necessities of the husband's profession. Robert Maury, portrayed by Conway Tearle, goes to the Argentine for three years. He leaves his young wife, Ethel, played by Dorothy Mackail in a setting which she herself selects, the city of Paris.

Regarding "The Next Morning," Lon Chaney, as you've always wanted to see him—without make-up and Louise Dresser complete the featured players in the cast of the picture which will be the feature of the Arcade theater today and tomorrow.

Tarkington's "Turmoil" Screened For Universal.

"The Turmoil," Tarkington's Hobart Henley picture of the Booth Tarkington novel, is at last to be seen here. The dramatic narrative of the middle strata and the upper crust of American life, its moving scenes portrayed by a group of known artists, its atmosphere reproduced in sets with fidelity and its filming guided with thoughtful care, comes to the War Theatre commencing Wednesday.

Hobart Henley, the director, made "The Film," "The Tarkington" story was commended upon by leading critics as a faithful transcription of the original tale. It survived the flood of screen material as an outstanding achievement, and "The Turmoil" according to book reviewers, was a novel of far more power.

There are reasons why "The Turmoil" has been awaited with interest. One of them is "Hilda." In the novel "Hilda" is a peculiar sort of a fellow, whose desiring temperament is beyond the understanding of his father, "Old Sam Sheldrake" who looks at life, with many another colossus of finance, in terms of money and power, George Hachetstone, universally
