INDIANS USED THIS
One of the finest of the world tobaccos is the great blue tobella, said to have been used by the American Indians in treatment of disease according to Nature Magazine. This species is found throughout the area east of the Mississippi river and like its more handsome relative, the cardinal flower, prefers a wet habitat.

WHERE ALMONDS GROW
The almond tree seems to prefer California, says Nature Magazine, as 95 per cent of the almonds grown in America are produced in that state and in a rather restricted area at that.

Author Praises Ben Alexander A Real Penrod.

"I never dreamed that it would be possible to cast a real 'Penrod' in my stories of that American boy," Booth Tarkington, author of the famous "Penrod" stories, declared in commenting upon the role as it is filled by Ben Alexander, youthful movie star.

"Being a real 'Penrod' and at the same time having obtained that training which is necessary for young boys to do movie or spoken drama is obviously a difficult background to possess.

"The one takes away from the other," Tarkington said.

"A true 'Penrod' has no time for long study for a dramatic career. He has only time for his corner lot games, his pirates' den, his attic, his public school and whatever natural bent he may have in the way of voluntary manual training work, mechanical interest, or even scribbling stories.

The true 'Penrod' would run out on his musical lessons, and he could play hockey on dramatic lessons, too. It is that individualism, that rebellious spirit which 'Penrods' are made of.

"But Ben Alexander upsets my theory. He has been able to stay a true American boy—a 'regular feller'—and also accomplish things in a dramatic way. The answer must be that Ben is naturally an actor; perhaps his dramatic training took the place in his life of the attic or the pirates' den. Whatever it is, he is so much the 'Penrod' of my brain that I could not have written my stories differently even if I had met Ben first and modeled after him."

No higher tribute to Ben's portrayal of "Penrod" could be paid him. And now it is Ben's turn to reciprocate to Tarkington. Having made a great success of his role in "Penrod and Sam," a First National picture, Ben is appearing in "Boy of Mine," another Booth Tarkington story. It is directed by William Beaudine and produced by J. K. McDonald for First National. The new film is a story of typical Tarkingtonesque fathers and sons and strikes a higher human note than "Penrod and Sam." "Boy of Mine" will be seen at the Arcade theatre Thursday.

"Fighting Devil" At Sherrys Today Only.

This feature rightly is catalogued in the Western Western class, although it has more than the usual amount of comedy common-ly found in screen plays of sag-brush and alkali. The characters are well cast, the leading man being a big, manly fellow who never distorts his delineation of the type he represents. Estelle Harrison, by no means unknown in the cinema world, plays opposite Mr. Francis, and two lovable characters are Daniel McKittrick and "Mother," splendidly played by Otto Nelson and May Foster. Billy Franey is capable. Claude Peyton, of the "Mystery" Ralph Barton, portrays a combination of Simon Legree and Jesse James. He is off the bad men of the screen and stage rolled into one, a personification of greed, avarice, jealousy and general wickedness—a conglomeration of Nero, Benedict Arnold and the Kaiser.

That ought to be sufficient to identify Mr. Peyton's work in this feature. One of the best things the producers did was to place little Fay McKinzie in the part. A child, especially of Fay's dimensions and personality, is bound to appeal and this three year-old youngster's work is really noteworthy.

"The Alaskan" To Be Shown at Star, Starting Friday.

(Here is Director Herbert Brenon's own story of what happened when he took his entire company to British Columbia and Alberta to produce Thomas Meighan's latest Paramount picture "The Alaskan" which opens next Friday at the Star Theatre.)

From the outset, I believed Jas. Oliver Curwood's story, "The Alaskan," as a motion picture, would afford Thomas Meighan his greatest role. It had many of the same qualities which made "The Covered Wagon" so powerful. There was a convincing reality in its situations which made the same appeal to something ingrained in the hearts of Americans.

Stories of the pioneers, if they are told in all their strong simplicity, as in "The Covered Wagon," will always light a glow in the true

American's breast. In the case of "The Alaskan," the story is of pioneers whose battles are so recent as scarcely to have become history.

It was to catch the fading glamour of the Alaskan empire builder as it merged with the strong, progressive spirit of the men who hold the land today, that we went northward.

I can never be sufficiently thankful for the fact that all the players in my company were seasoned actors. Inexperienced people could never have retained their enthusiasm for their roles in the face of the hardships and discouragements which met us. For such players as Estelle Taylor, John Salsgala, Charles Oglio, Frank Campanau and Ann May Wenz, who headed the cast supporting Thomas Meighan, each fresh obstacle served to strengthen their determination to achieve their utmost in "The Alaskan."

For ten days, following our arrival on location, we experienced every variety of weather, except good weather. It rained, hailed and snowed. The sun came out for brief intervals and then hid behind heavy clouds. Sometimes we remained in position for two or three hours, waiting for twenty or thirty seconds of clear sunshine to play a little scene. Frequently we would be only half way through it when the light would fall again and the whole effort was wasted.

GOOD FOOD FOR CATTLE
Silage corn is one of the principal foods of dairy cattle, and without corn milk would be much more expensive than it is. In the form of silage it is simply accurate made out of the whole corn plant instead of cobs and without the addition of salt, says Nature Magazine. Good corn silage has a pleasantly sour odor and is a most healthful and nourishing food.
