First Meeting Of Musical Interesting

The first regular meeting of the Monday Musical of the Neighborhood club was held last evening at the club rooms and was very successful. The business meeting started at 7:30 o'clock and following the business session an excellent program was given. Mrs. McAdory, chairman, opened the program with a short announcement after which Andrew Loney, Jr., assisted by Mrs. Julia Metzler of the piano and Kenneth Gekeler played "Sonata" by Victor Herbert. Mr. Loney has recently returned from the East and it was his first appearance since his return to La Grande. He is an excellent violinist and director and La Grande members are glad to have him here again.

Several four minute talks were made during the evening. Mrs. J. D. Lynch talking on "Music in the Home," Dr. R. P. Landis, "Music in Public Institutions," Miss Isabelle Miller, supervisor of music in the La Grande high school, "Music in the School," after which the girls' chorus of the high school sang a selection, "Musical Taste of the Community," Mrs. W. H. Parkinson, "Music in the Club," G. S. Brien, "Music in the Newspaper," Bruce Dennis, "Good Dance Music," Andrew Loney, after which Mr. Loney, Mrs. Metzler, Mr. Gekeler and Frank Robinson played "Mandolin," illustrating dance music, "Music in Motion Picture Theater," J. Donald Mc Coy, "Christmas Carols," East & Adair, "Human Memory Contest," Mrs. Sherwood Williams and "Music in the Church and Sunday School" by Reverend Elmer Grant Keith. The program closed by the W. W. G.'s singing a prayer, illustrating the music in the church and Sunday School.

During the evening, "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," by Fanny Fields, was also rendered by Mr. Loney and his assistants.

(The Evening Observer endeavors to publish all the social news of the city. Occasionally a request is made by someone giving a social event that it be not mentioned. This is to be regretted, for although the party giving a social function may feel sincerely that it is their affair and the public has no right to any knowledge of it, the fact remains that news is news and the general public expects to read of local happenings. The Observer has tried to conform to the wishes of all and has endeavored not to give mention without having details of social events, but it is very difficult to follow and we regret that better understanding cannot

Band of Lace A Feature

A wide band of real lace encircles the hips of this velvet gown and makes it very distinctive. There is also a corsage of red flowers. The gown is cut with the surplice line in back and in front and has a tunic effect with one long panel to break the line. This would be a difficult model for any but a very slender figure.

Two of La Grande's popular young people were united in marriage Sunday morning at 5:30 o'clock at the new Episcopal church when Miss Velma Switzer and Earl Larson were united in the holy bonds of matrimony with Reverend S. W. Cressley officiating. The mother of the groom, Mrs. Neal Snyder and Miss Myrtle Black were present. Immediately following the ceremony the happy couple left for Walla Walla, Washington, where they will spend a few days before returning to La Grande to make their home.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Larson have many friends in La Grande, having lived here for a number of years and being graduates of the La Grande high school. Mr. Larson is employed by the Carr Furniture company and Mrs. Larson has been employed by the Newlin Book Store.

Mrs. E. W. Hackman was hostess to forty members and friends of the Christian Scientist church last Friday evening at her home on Main street. The rooms were cleverly decorated to represent Halloween and a "Humminphone" was in progress during a large portion of the evening, which caused much merriment. Before an evening of fun was brought to a close delicious refreshments were served.

Beauty Hints

MADAME DE POMPADOUR. At the time when Louis XV of France was a mere puppet in the hands of the beautiful Madame de Pompadour, who made and unmade ministers and diplomats and who was the center of the intellectual and artistic circle which included Voltaire, Rousseau and Graun, nature was not deemed charming unless it was aided by artifice, sometimes all too obviously.

Consequently Madame Pompadour, whose vogue was responsible for the naming of fashions and finery of all kinds after her, until not only were there Pompadour ribbons, Pompadour fans, Pompadour collures, but even Pompadour toothpicks—and whose beauty needed no disguising, followed the fashions of the day in the matter of make-up. She had numerous but beauty recipes, one of them being the somewhat awkward and unbecoming practice of nightly applying poultices of raw beefsteak to her face—now recognized as a first-aid remedy for black eyes!

It is said that during this period the women of France, shopkeepers' wives and women of the court alike, used two million "spots" of paint each year. It was the era when cheeks without paint seemed as strange as heads without powder, and when one lady's announcement of her intention of abandoning rouge it created such a tumult that the question became a matter of state. The Duchess of Nivernais, wife of the French ambassador to Rome, mindful of the fact that in Rome rosy women were not presented to the pope, announced upon leaving Rome for her return to Paris by thiering that she would abandon rouge entirely. Her family and friends of the court protested vigorously against this step. Her mother left Paris to see her and convince her of the wrong of her ways before she arrived in Paris—armed with a paint pot for her daughter's immediate use. Still the duchess persisted in her decision. Finally her husband, who was still in Rome, sent a messenger to her with a note begging her to abandon this revolutionary step—and she yielded.

Today powder and rouge are accepted as requisites of every well-groomed woman. This is perhaps due to the fact that they are far removed from the cosmetics of even a century ago. The powder of today is not a whitewash designed to make the face look much whiter than it is—unnecessarily, of course. Only the woman with very pale clear skin would think of using dead white powder in these days when there is not only a powder for every type of skin and coloring, but usually several powders for use according to whether one is to be under artificial light or day light. Today powder is not a disguise. It merely intensifies the purity of the skin, and since a good face powder is made simply of talc and zinc oxide, if it is properly made of the best grades, it is really beneficial to the skin. The well-groomed woman gives as much if not more thought to choosing the powder and rouge's best suited to her than to the
