Composer Says Cost of Lessons Hampers U. S. Music Students

FRANKFORT, (AP) — Native musicians will never have a fair opportunity in the United States until the cost of musical education is reduced in America, according to Simon Bucheroff, the Chicago composer who is in Germany arranging for the production of his new grand opera, "Sakura."

"We should have government and city support for music schools and opera houses in the United States," said Mr. Bucheroff, "and I believe such public spirited citizens as General Dawes will eventually bring about the establishment of schools of that character, where poor, but talented, young Americans may get thorough musical education at small cost. A school, such as the Berlin Municipal High School, would be a boon to hundreds of young Americans who are struggling to become artists."

"In the Berlin school, German pupils have tuition for about $50 a year, and foreigners pay about twice that amount. Only youngsters who are well-rounded in music are taken, and the course in the school is ordinarily three years. Most of the pupils have had at least five years of training before they enter the Berlin school."

"Think of the difference in cost for students in Germany and America. Skilled teachers in the United States charge advanced pupils $10, $20 or even $50 a lesson. When one considers that most really gifted pupils in the United States cannot afford to pay even $2 a lesson and are often earning all their educational funds it is little wonder that American students become discouraged. We can educate our American singers and musicians in the United States better than it can be done here, and by so doing we can lay the foundation for a real American type of music and divorce ourselves from European standards."

"We can get all the European teachers we need in America and operate schools just as good as the government maintains in Germany or any other European country."

Bears Visiting Orchards. MILL CITY, Ore. — Hugh Matthews caught a small black bear in a trap near his ranch at Minto the latter part of last week. A number of bears have been killed around here this fall, and reports are in almost daily of bears having been seen by different persons. They do not appear to be very wild, frequenting the various orchards for food.
