Actor Enraptured by Audiences in America

PARIS (AP)—Americans are all heart, Firmin Gémier, great French actor, director of the Odéon theater, told the American Club of Paris in relating his impressions upon his return from the United States. He went over upon the invitation of the state department as a return for the French government's courtesy in asking James K. Hackett to play in Paris two years ago. "I want to go back and I will," said M.

Gémier. "The American theaters are well equipped and I can do there the things I dream of."

The American audience, the speaker said, is keenly responsive. "Your countrymen are sensitive, extraordinarily so, almost so much so as the French, and their emotion is deeper." To illustrate this he told of watching a Molnar play in New York, in which occurs a highly emotional scene. The audience, after three minutes of tense-ness, just as the curtain was falling, began to laugh. M. Gémier praised American theaters, American simplicity and honesty of expression, and above all the freedom from government control of art.

Portia's Father Was Old-fashioned

IN THE day of Shakespeare's famous heroine, buying and selling were contests of wits. In Venice, haggling and dickering were the vogue. Along the Rialto, sharp practice was the rule. Every purchase of silk or spices was made at the buyer's risk. One had to be a shrewd judge of values and one's fellows to escape trickery.

Portia's father—a merchant—was used to the ideas of guess, luck and accident. So much so, indeed, that it seemed natural to him to entrust the choice of his daughter's husband to three closed caskets and a lucky guess!

Nowadays, we do not transact business blindly—nor leave important decisions to chance. It is not necessary for us to gamble when we buy. Commodities are identified for us by trade-marks. Manufacturers go to the advertising columns to tell us about their products. Merchants describe their merchandise—price, quality and service.

By reading advertisements, we get a knowledge of goods and stores that we can depend on. Advertising reduces chance, in buying, to a minimum.
