3 Husbands?

Mrs. Ralph Tenmel, editor of the Sabetha Herald, Sabetha, Kansas, who says every woman needs three husbands: one for social life, who must be a good dancer, one for making money and one of the "stubby cut" type to keep things running smoothly at home.

Flash Finger Prints Across the Atlantic

LONDON (AP)—All the police chiefs in the principal cities of the United States, and other parts of the world, have been supplied with the key of a new telegraphic code perfected by Superintendent Charles Collins of the finger print bureau at Scotland Yard. Under this plan, by which the radio is brought into play to assist the work of detectives in tracing criminals, the records of persons held on suspicion may be obtained by wireless broadcasting of their finger prints.

BREWERS OF EARLY DEMISE WARNED OF EARLY DEMISE

LONDON (AP)—The brewers, bar-maids, draymen, independent and others in the liquor trade are only half as long as the remainder of the population, according to Sir Andrew Clark, of London, speaking at a temperance meeting in Dover.

ENGLAND'S MILLS GET RAW COTTON FROM ASIA MINOR

LIVERPOOL (AP)—The arrival here of 1,000 bales of cotton from the port of Merzina in Asia Minor, marks the opening of a new source of cotton supply to the spinning mills of Lancashire. It will be a new source in the sense of constituting an addition to the cotton which has been furnished with raw cotton, say the Westminister Gazette, but curiously enough it was from this quarter of the Turkish empire that Britain first began to draw her cotton supplies nearly four centuries ago. They were the mainstay of cotton spinning in England before the days of Arkwright, and before cotton cultivation in America assumed serious proportions.

Argentine Highway Would Link National and All State Capital

Buenos Aires (AP)—The building of a great national highway to link up Buenos Aires with all the state capitals of Argentina and from which branches would be constructed to important cities of each state is proposed by the public works department. It is understood that the department will soon begin work upon preliminary plans connected with the project.

Mule Disease Plays Havoc With Livestock in Sweden

STOCKHOLM (AP)—Nearly the whole of Sweden has been swept by an epidemic of mule-disease and in an effort to stamp it out thousands of animals have been killed. The first case of the disease was reported in Bern in the south, and immediately every precaution was taken to prevent its spread.

Straying Royal Deer Lead Horse Guards Merry Chase

WINDSOR, Eng. (AP)—A detachment of His Majesty's Horse Guards was called out recently to round up and drive back to the royal preserve in Windsor Park a herd of deer which had strayed into a nearby estate, doing much damage. The guards reached Ascot in the morning and proceeded to accept the wagers, but after several hours' work only succeeded in driving one deer back to the park. They adjourned operations in the afternoon.

About 150 Years Ago King George III. Discovered That His Deer Had Off the Royal Forests at Windsor and Invaded the Surrounding Lodges at Ascot. He ordered the Life Guards to drive them back and they were probably more successful than the present day guards who found that his deer were able to get through places in the undergrowth where a horse could not.

volunteers in November 1862. General Wilson served as chief topographical engineer and inspector general of the army of the Tennessee until October, 1862, being active in the operations before and during the siege of Vicksburg. He became captain of engineers in May 1862 and brigadier general of volunteers in October of the same year. He was engaged in the operations near Chattanooga, the battle of Missionary Ridge and the relief of Knoxville, constructing bridges until December, 1862.

General Wilson after a short tour of duty at Washington, in charge of the cavalry bureau in the army of the Potomac, bore a conspicuous part in the operations under General Philip H. Sheridan from May until August, 1864, including the Richmond raid and combats near Petersburg. He also led his division during the Shenandoah campaign, including the battle of Opequan. In October, 1864, he was assigned to the command of the cavalry corps of the military division of the Mississippi, organizing a body of 15,000 mounted men, and contributing largely to the success that attended the armies of the West under General George H. Thomas and General William T. Sherman, particularly by the assault and capture of Richmond, Ga., Montrose, Ga., and Columbus and Macon, Ga., in April, 1864, when he was promoted to major general of volunteers. In 28 days he captured five fortified cities, 23 stands of colors, 288 guns and 6,829 prisoners, among whom was Jefferson Davis.

Having been mustered out of the volunteer service in January, 1865, General Wilson took for a short time engaged in the improvement of the Mississippi river. He was commissioned lieutenant colonel of the 55th infantry and later brevetted to the grade of major general, U. S. army, "for gallant and meritorious services" in the capture of Fort Pulaski, the capture of Chattanooga and the capture of Nashville and the capture of Selma. He was honorably discharged at his own request December 21, 1870.

After leaving the army, General Wilson built and managed railroads in the Mississippi valley and in New England, notably the Cairo and Vincennes, the St. Louis and Southwestern, and the Louisville, Evansville and St. Louis Air Line. He was president and receiver of the St. Louis and Southwestern railway in 1872-73, and became vice president and chief engineer of the Electric Railway of New York and president of the New York and New England Railway company in 1878-82.

In 1872, General Wilson was the agent of a commission to negotiate in Europe a loan for the Japanese government. He visited Russia in 1871 on business connected with the construction of

EASY LESSONS IN AUCTION BRIDGE

They are certainly wide differences of opinion as to the so-called "conventions" of auction. Some players advocate conventions and rules to fit every case, which would convert the game from an amusement into a study, from a pastime to a lesson. Every one who wanted to play a better game would have to learn and observe these numerous conventions and rules. There would always be a right and wrong way of playing and bidding every hand and the burden of too many conventions would be heavy on the game. They are becoming too complex and unless they tend to stifle the player's ingenuity, certain conventions are undoubtedly necessary for they convey information to partner that makes a full understanding possible. Such conventions are recognized leaders, for example, give absolute infor-

No score, rubber game, Z dealt hearts. He now led the deuce and bid one diamond, A one heart, Y one spade and B two hearts, Z two spades, A passed, Y passed and B bid three clubs, Z three spades, A four clubs, Y four spades and B five clubs, Z passed, A passed, Y five clubs, B doubled and all passed, B opened the king of hearts. His partner, A, a very fine player, knew that if B held four or more hearts, he would open his fourth best card and therefore, must hold three hearts or less. A queen of the ace and then the queen.

If diamonds are trumps and Z is in the lead, how can Y-Z win six of the seven tricks against any defense? Z should lead the deuce of clubs and let B win the trick with the ten. B can now lead either hearts or spades. (a) If B leads the deuce of hearts Z should trump it and lead his remaining trump. A cannot discard a spade for if he does, Z can lead his king of spades, throw Y in the lead with the king of clubs and lead the spades through B's nine and so score all the tricks. If A discards a club, both of Y's clubs are good. Therefore, A must discard a heart, Y should discard
