PICTURES TO BE SENT BY WIRE

Tests to Determine the Practicability of Transmission of Photos over Long Distance Telephone Lines.

Photographs have been successfully sent across the continent by wire in recent tests conducted by the Bell Telephone company.

The purpose of the present test is to demonstrate the practicability of transmitting pictures over long distance telephone lines. Four cities are connected together for the purpose of this test, the arrangements being such that pictures will be sent from Washington, D. C. to New York, Chicago and San Francisco simultaneously.

The length of the telephone line between Washington and San Francisco via New York is about 2,600 miles, the greatest distance over which pictures have ever been transmitted electrically and the transmission time is only seven minutes.

This system of transmitting pictures electrically was first publicly tested in essentially its present form in May, 1924. The present demonstration is in anticipation of the opening of a transcontinental picture transmission service shortly to be announced by the American Telephone and Telegraph company.

The system is a development of the engineers of the American Telephone and Telegraph company and the Bell Telephone Laboratories, Incorporated.

It is the outcome of work covering several years and provides a simple, rapid and accurate picture transmitting system which will operate over a telephone line. The apparatus represents the association of many recent inventions by telephone engineers together with standard types of telephone and telegraph apparatus which have been readapted to this new use.

The simplicity of the method is such that a positive transparency film is suitable for transmission. The apparatus is so designed as to transmit a picture five inches by seven inches in seven minutes. The picture is received in such form that, after photographic development of the usual sort, it is practically undistinguishable from an ordinary photograph and is ready for newspaper or other reproduction. Line drawings, handwriting, and printing can also be transmitted. As films can be used for transmission while still wet, this system eliminates the delay which would otherwise be caused by drying and by making special sending plates.

The film upon which a picture has been transferred is inserted in the transmitter simply by rolling it up in a cylindrical form. During operation a very small and intense beam of light strikes through the film onto a photoelectric cell within. The film is rotated at a uniform speed and by means of a screw mechanism is caused to advance parallel to the axis of the cylinder. The motion of the light relative to the cylinder is therefore the same as that of a photograph made relative to a cylindrical record. In this way, each minute portion of the picture in turn affects the photoelectric cell. This variation in the amount of light striking the sensitive surface of the cell gives rise to a current which, through the agency of a vacuum tube amplifier and modulator, controls the current flowing through the telephone line.

At the receiving end an unexposed photographic film is rotated under a beam of light in a manner similar to that at the transmitting end. The two films are caused to rotate at exactly the same rate and, by means of a lens system, known as a light valve, the amount of light reaching the film at the receiving end.

Regarding the use of their system, the officials of the American Telephone and Telegraph company announced that the extent to which it is instituted on their various long distance lines will depend entirely upon the demand which arises for this type of service. As has been demonstrated in previous tests, the system is also applicable to radio transmission of pictures when atmospheric conditions are such that steadiness of transmission and freedom from interference can be assured.

Germans Regain Control Of Italian Textile Mills

MILAN, Italy (AP)—Germany, which exercised a decisive economic influence in northern Italy before the war, is rapidly regaining its ground in at least the textile industry. It is understood that the numerous spinning mills in the neighborhood of Milan are again mostly in the hands of German capital, and that a system of cheap Italian and skilled German labor on the product has been worked out by which cotton and imitation silk goods yield handsome profits.

The Germans about Milan import their cotton from America and the yarn is spun by cheap Italian labor. The partly-finished product is then sent to the textile concerns of middle-Germany, chiefly in the neighborhood of Chemnitz, where certain processes requiring skilled labor, such as dyeing, are applied. Then the almost-finished product undergoes back to Italy, from where it is sold. The combination of cheap Italian and skilled German labor enables the manufacturers to set up prices that compete successfully with those of other countries.

A large part of the product goes to Amsterdam. The fact that the sporting country is Italy is an especially favorable circumstance for the German owners, since Italy has a treaty with Jugoslavia by which her textile duties are advanced which are not extended to Germany.

Congressman Stopped When Gun Threatened

"The man said they were prohibition officers and wanted to see what I had around."

"I said all right, help yourselves. I'm with you on that proposition. I'm a prohibitionist, too."

"Humph!" grunted one of the men. "We're not prohibitionists. We're just enforcing the law."

Members of the Senate seem to offer particularly attractive marks to reckless prohibition agents and automobile drivers.

Recently Senator Frank Greene of Vermont was shot and seriously wounded by a "dry" officer in the out of a bootlegger. Now Senator A. Gwaley Stanley of Kentucky, as he leaves the Willard Hotel at midnight, homebound, is knocked sprawling into Pennsylvania avenue by a speeding motorist.

The irony of Stanley's accident, which sent him to a hospital for repairs, is that it followed within two days after he had fought in the Senate floor against drastic penalties for motorists who injure pedestrians in the District of Columbia.

Wayne R. Wheeler, Anti-Slavery League leader, is developing a talent for epigrams. Here is his latest effort:

"The scoundrel would dissolve the great constitutional government in a glass of moonshine."

General John L. Hines, army chief-of-staff, would trade his olive branch for youth. That's what Hines is out the other day when he said he'd rather be a lieutenant than a general. Lieutenants are young.
