

VOCAL SOLOS PRAISEWORTHY

The annual appearance of the Southern Opera company at the Grand opera house and their 1925 presentation of the "Balletic" was very favorably received by the audience. Tonight the company presented "The Three Little Pigs".

The "Balletic" was an opera in three acts and was very well received by the audience. The first act of the play, set 22 years later, found the company in a number of the company, as before.

George "The" Brown, an American, the opera's producer, furnished several laughs with his comedy work.

The state officials and the members of the audience of the hall gathered in a morning session to the comedy and orchestra of the "Balletic" last night.

The Battle Man Held
3335 MALDEN Ave.—William Armstrong, alleged to have been the shot that wounded the Grandfather of George, today when the latter expressed the American issue, was taken into custody on a warrant charging assault with a dangerous weapon.

Armstrong was lodged in the county jail pending a hearing. Police are working on the theory that Armstrong shot "Grandfather" the latter sought to kill his estranged wife who was at the Grandfather house. Francis signed the warrant against him.

"Bedtime Story" Concerns Pearls

Grandmother's eyes were closed, and from your hand, it dropped through the floor and falling on her bed. "Pearls, pearls, your pearls!"

The bedroom was dark, the bed was empty, but the light of the moon shined through the window.

On the third night, the little figure appeared again. "Pearls, pearls," she said. "I have brought you to find my grandchild from the old dropping on her bed. Don't you know, for the last time I beg you to show your pearls."

Grandmother, by the little figure's persuasion, lay down on her bed, ready for her maid and ordered the lamp lit.

Eight nights later the night grandchild came again, smiling and happy. Her grandchild was with her, he said, and they were leaving.

"I love you a precious," he said, "to a token of our gratitude. Treasure it. As long as it passes from man to man in your family it will bring good fortune. When a pearl changes color, the hand of the family will die. Should she be damaged, infelicitous will come."

And with a kiss the woman disappeared.

The bedroom was dark, and in her dream she saw a beautiful string of pearls.

Those pearls are with the most treasured possessions of the von Maltrons. It is not likely Washington society will get a chance to examine them, for they have been kept for many generations in the family castle of Maltrons in Sweden.

But time has confirmed the promise of the story. The Maltrons increased in wealth and power.

In 1918, Joseph von Maltron, during a family banquet, accidentally broke one of the pearls with his dagger.

Almost at the same instant a stroke of lightning struck a part of the castle. Never since then they have been guarded carefully from man to man in the same proud inheritance of the ancient family.
