BLAST USED IN LOOTING SAFE HERE

Home home, which is in the rear of the store building.
The Newlin job had apparently been done, according to the police, by someone that had hid in the store before closing time. The Richardson robbery looked more or less like the work of an amateur and it is indicated that the Forstrom store looting might also come under this classification.

Whether a local ring of burglars exists in this county, or whether the robberies are the work of different individuals, is more or less conjecture, as each case presents a somewhat different angle.
The officers are working on the cases and hope to be able to shed some light on the criminals responsible in the near future.

The 1924 season.
Cove has written La Grande for a game and wanted to play next Sunday. As the La Grande team will not be organized by that time, Manager French is corresponding with the Cove team in an attempt to have the game booked here for a week from tomorrow.

Three-Player Team

By the provisions of the league this year each team is allowed but three out-of-town players. These may be changed at any time and are the only ones supposed to receive a regular specified salary.
It is certain that two of the La Grande men under this classification will be the pitcher and the catcher and it is probable that the third one will play first base. Most of the other positions can be more or less satisfactorily filled by material available here.

HUNTERS SEEK RARE BEASTS

CHICAGO (AP)—Animals to be sought for the Field Museum by Colonel Theodore and Kermit Roosevelt and George K. Cherris during the James Simpson-Roosevelt expedition to Central Asia this year are among the strangest and most beautiful in the world, according to zoologists at the museum here.

The expedition, financed by James Simpson, president of Marshall, Field & Co., will sail from New York in April. It probably will enter India via Bombay, and travel northward by rail to the foot of the Himalayan outer range and go by automobile to Serniagar. From then on into the Pamir region plateaus it will use pack horses, yaks, camels and coolies.

In addition to seeking specimens of the rare Ovis Polii, or Marco Polo sheep, the three white men will also hunt the Markhor, the finest of goats; the Yarkand stag, the Himalayan ibex, the gorrilled gazelle, the long-haired tiger, the ounce or snow leopard, the Tibetan Argali, a wild sheep; the Tibetan antelope, the Kashmir stag, the big Asiatic brown bear, and other mammals as well as birds of the region, according to D. C. Davie, director of the museum.

"Old Polli is probably the most interesting of these animals, owing to the romance attached with it in connection with Marco Polo's travels," said W. H. Osgood, curator of zoology at the museum. "When the explorer returned to Europe after his trip into Cathay in the thirteenth century, his description of the huge animal caused many learned men to brand him as a fakir. The sheep is bigger than the American Rocky Mountain bighorn sheep, and has huge spiral horns. Although the spread of the horns is usually about 55 inches, each horn sometimes measures from 60 to 75 inches from tip to base, the spirals resembling the spread.

"Perhaps the most beautiful of the animals sought is the ounce or snow leopard. The snow leopard is so-called because it lives in the snow above the timber line, or close to the edge of the timber. It is white with black spots, and possesses a beautiful, long heavy tail. It is about the size of an American mountain lion or leopard. Stag Described.

"The Kashmir stag is a big deer related somewhat to the European red deer and American elk. The Tibetan Shan stag, another possible trophy, is a similar animal and one of the most magnificent of the deer tribe. Attempts also will be made to obtain specimens of the Tibetan Argali, a wild sheep weighing ordinarily about 200 pounds, found in northern India and Tibet, a majestic animal, remarkable for its horns which are heavy with the curve down and forward. Sometimes these horns are 20 inches in circumference at the base.

"The big Asiatic brown bear, of the type of the American Kodiak bear, but not quite so large, is also an inhabitant of the Himalayan plateaus and mountains. It resembles the European brown bear and that sheep raises like.
