Building Permits

Perry Blumhard was issued a permit at the city offices this morning for building a house on Seventh street between I and J avenues. The construction cost is estimated at $2900.

VOTERS MAY DECIDE ON LIGHT PLAN

The city officials will confer with the planning commission with the view of strengthening out several matters, including approval upon some certain plan of lighting such as the "stagger" system, the cluster system or some other.

Victory Way Plan
A communication was also received stating that the La Grande Neighborhood Club, in order to benefit the city, will provide the city with funds for the plan.

The commissioners were mentioned in their belief that some arrangement must be made to provide better lighting for this city, especially in the business district, and there is little doubt but that by next Wednesday night, the matter will be put through.

Ordinances Passed
Several ordinances were read and passed last evening.

One provided for the regulation of the alley in block 70, Chaplin's addition. The vote was Yes 3, no 0.

A second ordinance amending the sidewalk ordinance passed some time ago was read for the third time and unanimously adopted.

An ordinance regarding the operation of skating rinks and setting a license fee was read for the third time and passed. The license fee for skating rinks is the same as charged for dance halls.

An ordinance, defining stage boxes, stage boxes and providing for regulating same, was read three times and adopted.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION ADVOCATED

That the ancient Greeks and medieval scholars would be unable to recognize ours as the same planet upon which they lived.

Times Change
A few decades ago a large majority of our population was living in the open country and the center of industry in the large cities did not constitute such an important element in our national life as they do today.

The majority of the population has shifted into the cities and it is predicted in the open country and the center of industry in the large cities did not constitute such an important element in our national life as they do today.

Under these conditions, it is easy to see that for most people a type of education is needed which is radically different from the type of education of the past.

Our high schools are now offering courses in commerce, trade and industrial education, home economics, agriculture, and other vocational subjects. Under the stimulation of the federal vocational act, millions of dollars have been expended on vocational education, and the number of schools offering full and part time vocational instruction has been constantly increasing.

Formerly liberal arts and special preparation for certain higher vocations, such as law, medicine and the ministry, or what are commonly called the professions, was about all that was available in the colleges. At the present time none of our institutions of higher learning are growing more rapidly than the agricultural, mechanical, and commercial colleges.

Declaring that "it has been difficult to produce a product that has interested in the minds of many students, education which under-taken to prepare one to gain a livelihood in trades or industries or even commerce," Mr. Tigert said in conclusion:

New Need
"We will always need culture and training for the learned professions, but a constantly increasing portion of our population are requiring a different type of education. If our ideals of democracy and equality of opportunity are to be practically realized, ancient professions and artificial distinctions must be eliminated.

"For the great variety of talents, abilities and vocations which the complexity of modern life provides, there must be a varied educational program. A majority of the people must engage in pursuits which involve the use of hands. Manual and industrial arts must be recognized as being as truly honorable as those callings which depend purely upon the mind and culture; otherwise, education will eventually become destructive and a handicap to progress."
