Anglers Preparing for Fishing Season Opening

Summerville, usually lower than most of the others at this time of year, are up and coming with a rush and even the most voracious trout would have difficulty catching a fly cast upon the torrent.

But the fish will be counted just the same. Many of the La Grande anglers are more than equal to the task of coping with high waters and will bring in the limit catch of 50 fish by tomorrow afternoon.

Two prizes to add zest to the early fishing have been offered by La Grande merchants. Frank Lilly has a sign in his window announcing that an expensive line will be given to the fisherman who returns by noon on the opening day with the best catch. The Oregon Hardware and Implement company is also displaying a fine taper end line which will be given for the best fish caught before May first.

to do away with this evil would be to procure leases for advertising privileges upon the grounds in question and thus block advertising concerns. Earl Stoddard suggested that the merchants who patronize poster boards be interviewed with the purpose of impressing upon them why such displays on scenic spots should not be patronized. G. S. Burnie declared that the citizens owning such property should be interested enough in the community's wishes to not permit advertising companies erecting poster boards.

When the vote was taken it was found that the chamber of commerce members unanimously favor discouraging poster boards along the scenic highway.

Typists Derive Revenue From Munich Graveyards

MUNICH, Germany (AP). — Stenographers out of jobs in Munich have found a source of revenue in the local cemeteries. It is their custom to attend all funerals and take down the words of the officiating clergyman. These they transcribe neatly on morning paper with a black border, and then offer their work to the relatives of the deceased. In almost every case the relatives buy not only the first transcript, but often order a considerable number of carbon copies.

LUMBER DEMAND LACKING

A continued gradual pick-up in demand for lumber is reported by distributors in all sections of the country, says the American Lumberman, Chicago. Fair and moderately warm weather has been the general rule during the last fortnight or more, and this has encouraged contractors to get their jobs under way and homebuilders to get busy with their plans. Retail yards consequently have been busy sending out lumber, but here so far they are conservative in their buying. Nevertheless, as their stocks are decreasing they find it necessary to come into the market more frequently, and distributors believe that in a few weeks there will be a general movement toward replenishing.

The increase in buying has perhaps been especially noted in southern pine. The wood continues to hold firm and some predict early advances in the more popular items. Though the mills are operating steadily at the highest level for many months, stocks are reported to be only fair, and assortments in many cases are poor. Some transit cars are still being offered, but their position is strong and they are no longer a problem.

The feature of the Douglas fir market is the steadily increasing rail demand. Formerly cargo markets remain comparatively active, though California is showing more interest and probably will become a large factor within the near future. Exports recently have been voluminous. The price situation is unchanged. The mills are operating steadily, but are cutting less than they are selling. Stocks are low and broken. Upper grades are in plentiful supply, but many yard items, such as dimension and boards, are scarce and consequently show the greatest strength.

A slight increase in activity on the hardwood market is reported, but this trade remains much restricted, and prices are depressed on account of increasing mill stocks in the south and competition for new business. The furniture industry is buying better, and the interior trim makers are also good customers. The flooring business is practically at a standstill, but is bound to increase materially within the next month, after building gets fully under way. This demand will benefit the hardwood market largely. Spring will also bring better business from the automotive interests, it is felt, and a good export trade is in prospect.

PIONEER OF LA GRANDE PASSES ON

the Knights of Pythias, Red Cross Lodge No. 27, of La Grande. He was a charter member of the institution, formed in 1889, and was past chancellor.

During the years that the county seat was at Union, Mr. Frawley erected a five-room residence, but when La Grande became the county seat, Mr. Frawley took up residence here. At present Mrs. Frawley has been operating the Imperial hotel, where the family also made its home.

The remains are at the Behnon-kamp chapel today.

INVENTOR OF AUTO IS DEAD

tal trip with his horseless carriage, Mr. Haynes formed a company for the manufacture of automobiles and was president of it for many years. He invented numerous improvements in the automobile.

"The Father of the Automobile" was a school teacher at the start of his career. This did not suit him, however, as he always was of an inventive turn of mind and, long before he developed the idea for a horseless carriage, was given to experimenting in chemistry. One of his ambitions was to find a combination of metals that would resist the oxidizing influences of the atmosphere and at the same time take a good cutting edge. An alloy of cobalt and chromium which is used now for making dental and surgical instruments was the result. He also invented and discovered a number of other alloys.

Native Hoosier.

Mr. Haynes was a native Hoosier, having been born at Portland, Ind., October 14, 1857. After completing the course in the public schools there, he attended Worchester Polytechnic Institute at Worchester, Mass., where he was graduated in 1881. Later he was a student at Johns Hopkins university. He was married in 1887 to Miss Bertha Lanterman, also of Portland, Ind., The two children, a son and daughter, both assisted their father in his laboratory work in connection with his factories in Kokomo, Ind.

Soldier Gives Warning To Corrupt Portugal

LISBON, (AP)—A frank letter from a Portuguese army officer, written in reply to a general query as to what the army would do in case of a popular uprising, has focused attention on a very serious situation. The writer, Captain Jose de Barros Norfolk, says the army, dying of hunger, would remain inactive except in the case of a national danger. His letter in part follows:

"The soldiers are half starved and the officers are poverty stricken under the gilt braid. The response to the army for putting down strikes and rising and reducing the turbulent classes to order, is the misery in which officers and their families live, and hunger among the men. The indifference of the politicians will be rewarded by our folding our arms in our barracks and letting people outside kill each other. We are tired of so much talk, so much moral misery, so much robbery and exploitation. The army has three paths before it, and will shortly have to choose the one to follow.

"First, to let itself die slowly of hunger; second, to fold its arms in the face of any revolution that does not threaten the nation itself or the republic; third, to drive out all politicians, cleanse all the posts occupied now by thieves and traitors, and hand the administration of the state to Portuguese citizens who deserve that name."

Three men shot a general in Mexico City. And then we'll bet the peasants tried to vote thinking it was an election.

LIKES CELLAR BEST OF ALL

LONDON (AP) — Sir Everard Hambro, a director of the Bank of England, who died recently at the age of 83, was owner of one of the largest residences in the world, but he never called it a palace or a castle, preferring it to be known always merely as his home. The Hambro house in Dorsetshire was known to the neighbors as Milton Abbey, getting its name from the fact that originally, it was a monastery. It was remodeled many years ago by Sir Everard and, taking in all the old nooks of the ancient buildings, was found to have about 260 rooms.

Sir Everard was extremely simple in his tastes, and one of his friends was that his home contained 255 rooms more than he required. Outside of his library, the favorite haunt of Sir Everard was the basement. Here he had fixed up a work shop, and spent many hours each day pottering with hammers and saws and other tools used by workers in wood. The banker frequently remarked that he had always, in a way, regretted that he had not been a cabinet maker by trade.

The Hambro London banking firm of which Sir Everard was the head, contained some of the finest financial traditions of the last century. The company assisted materially in the reconstruction of Italy after the financial disaster which overtook the country in the days of Napoleon.

Patient Study Reveals Floating Ice Secrets

WASHINGTON, (AP) — The coast guard is planning to train some of its officers as specialists in ice patrol work, Lieutenant Commander Edward H. Smith, who has been serving as oceanographic officer of the service, is taking advantage of a year's fellowship offered him by the American-Scandinavian foundation, on the recommendation of Harvard scientists, and is studying the question of icebergs and their contributing causes and life at Bergen, Norway.

Commander Smith has been a pioneer in ice patrol work, serving on coast guard vessels in the iceberg lanes and during the winter months, working up data at coast guard headquarters, and conducting research at Harvard University.

From a mission of following icebergs and warning craft of their whereabouts, the duties of the ice patrol have grown to include study of the ocean, including the currents that carry the bergs, the places where they form and other scientific data bearing on them.

This service dates from 1914, following the signing by 13 powers interested in transatlantic navigation of a convention, which provided for "an international derelict-destruction, ice-observation and ice patrol service." The sinking of the Titanic by an iceberg in 1912 really initiated the movement and coast guard officers point with pride to the fact that since the ice patrol was established, no lives have been lost because of icebergs in the ocean lanes of the North Atlantic.

LABOR DEMAND IS SATISFIED

county road work last week required a considerable number of men. Logging operation is below normal but there are practically no experienced loggers now employed. The National camps at Cedarville were opened last week. Lumber production at about 50 per cent of Grays Harbor sawmills continues to be curtailed to five days weekly. Lumber shipping has recently been more active.

Tacoma.

Fewer men have applied for work during the past week than at any time this year. Construction activity has increased, both in Tacoma and outside points. Sawmills here are continuing the short week. Logging is below normal for this time of year.

Seattle.

Greatly increased labor turnover in practically all industries was noted here last week. Logging and lumbering activity remains unchanged. Calls for miners from Alaska and from Clallam county, coupled with continued demands for farm help, milkers, construction men, and laborers for clearing land, have greatly reduced the number of unemployed in Seattle. Most of the men now out of work here are seeking some special kind of employment.

Spokane.

Woods work in the Inland Empire is not yet fully under way and there are quite a number of unemployed woodsmen here waiting for camps to open. Pine sawmills are busy on the season's cut and several are operating two shifts. The Elk River mill of the Potlatch Lumber company will add a night crew April 15. Planing departments are still on reduced schedules.

La Grande, Ore.

There are plenty of men in this district to handle all local needs. Sawmilling is at normal for this time of year, but shipping is rather light. Work on the Mt. Emily Timber company's new mill is going ahead rapidly. This plant will be a three-band mill and will be ready for cutting about August 1.
