PRUNE DRYING IS URGED

PENDLETON, Ore.—The salvation of the prune-growing industry in east end of Umatilla county rests in the establishing of a method either to dry or can the fruit instead of putting it all on market in a fresh state, according to the opinion expressed here by H. E. Gleason, manager of a grower's marketing organization. The speech by Mr. Gleason was delivered at the monthly membership meeting of the Pendleton Commercial association, to which representatives from Milton and Freewater were especially invited guests.

A market exists for between 700 and 800 carloads of fresh prunes at a reasonable price, Mr. Gleason said, but during 1925 it is expected that production will be between 1800 and 2000 carloads.

Sherrys Showing Latest Picture Type "Lash of the Whip"

Sometimes the motion picture producers leave the beaten path and, making a radical advance, develop a new type of picture. This Arrow Film corporation has done in a series of four so-called "stunt" pictures, the first of which "Lash of the Whip," starring Ashton Dearholt, supported by Florence Gilbert, will be shown today and tomorrow.

The scenes, laid in a remote and hitherto unphotographed section of the great southwest, are unsurpassed in beauty by any scenes, while the story is full of the mystery and romance so identified with that little known country.

The role of "Pinto Pete," played by Ashton Dearholt, is the same sort of actively athletic part that gave "Doug" Fairbanks his rise to film fame.

A Robin Hood of the old west, his only weapons are his muscles and a short-handled, long-lashed "bull whip," by both required to be deadly. He wrests from the rich to help the needy, and avenges the wrongs of the helpless. This part gives Dearholt ample opportunity to make the most of his good looks, graceful physique, athletic prowess, superb horsemanship, as well as marvellous accuracy with his deadly lash.

Extricating himself from seemingly impossible situations, he finally accomplishes his good work, and in the end found to be a most important person.

The unknown heroine, Florence Gilbert, has a difficult role in which she acquits herself with grace and charm as well as showing she, too, has studied physical culture to advantage.

Comedy showing "Good Spirits."

Wallace Beery, who plays one of the leading supporting roles in Colleen Moore's new picture, "So Big," got his start toward film fame by carrying water for the elephants in a circus.

He ran away with a circus when a boy, and although he was brought back home and given a sound spanking, his brief taste of the show world lasted.

When old enough he became a trainer of elephants for Ringling Brothers, Barnum ability developed and at the close of the second season he quit Ringling's and took on stock acting. His first engagement was with Eva Long and O. D. Willard, Kansas City favorites.

In time Beery reached New York and played leading parts in H. W. Savage musical comedies. Among his successes here were "The Yankee Consul," "Prince of Pilsen" and "Babes in Toyland." Melodrama followed, and he starred in "Way Down East," "Girl of the Golden West" and others.

Beery's first screen success was with Blanche Sweet in "The Unpardonable Sin." Numerous other pictures found him steadily climbing the ladder of screen fame until, in Frank Lloyd's "Sea Hawk," he became one of the best known actors on the screen.

Beery repeats the tremendous success he scored in "The Sea Hawk" in "So Big," his latest production. Aside from him, Miss Moore's supporting cast includes Phylis Haver, Ford Sterling, John Bowers, Ben Lyon, Dot Farley, Jean Hersholt, Gladys Brockwell and others.

"So Big" is an adaptation from Edna Ferber's famous novel. It was directed by Charles Brabin, under the supervision of Earl Hudson, and will be shown at the Arcade theater today.

Great Air Battle Is Climax To "Frivolous Sal."

An agreement releasing the Hecla Mining company of Wallace, Idaho, from all liability had to be signed by every member of J. K. McDonald's First National company before that production unit could use the aerial tramways in the Idaho mines, where thrilling fight scenes were made for the climax to "Frivolous Sal," now being shown at the Star theater.

The "punch" of the story is built around a hand-to-hand battle between Eugene O'Brien and Mitchell Lewis in an ore bucket traveling on a cable over a 500-foot gorge. A special ore bucket had to be built to accommodate the director, Victor Schertzinger, and Chester Lyons, the cinematographer, with his camera. From this the fight was photographed as the two buckets rolled along the aerial train.

It was risky business for everyone concerned. The film people, accustomed to dangerous work in bringing thrills to the screen, thought nothing of it, but officials of the mining company whose property was being used, viewed the situation differently. It was not until every member of the motion picture company had signed the unconditional release, that permission was granted to stage the scene. However, it went off without untoward incident.

Modistes Turn to Brigands In Search for New Fashions

LONDON (AP)—The highwayman's cape worn by robbers in the time of King George I is coming into fashion this spring for women. Capes generally are in favor, but the style made famous by Dick Turpin, the Jesse James of England 200 years ago, and other notables in the robbing game have been particularly popular, most of them dipping far past the waist line, many of them scallopwise.

Among the first to follow this vogue was Miss Ava Bodley, well known in society, who was married recently to Robert Wigram, secretary of the British Embassy in Paris. Mrs. Wigram's going away costume included a cape over a long coat which matched a pale mignonette green dress and green felt hat.

The La Grande Lumber company is progressing rapidly with its log drive, as the river is just at the proper stage. The logs have reached the Hunter place and in a few days will be at Perry.

Miss Janet Waldrof has consented to give a special reading this afternoon at 2 o'clock at Stewart's opera house before the ladies Neighborhood club. The members of the club are requested to invite their friends. Miss Waldrof will give readings from Shakespeare's greatest plays.

Died—In this city at the Hotel Foley, Friday, April 22, 1898, I. Brown of Granger, Iowa. The deceased came to this city last Sunday morning and registered and asked for a room, saying he was suffering from a severe chill. A doctor was called and pronounced him suffering from pneumonia caused by exposure. He continued to grow worse and died last evening at 10:20. He has a sister in White Cloud, Michigan, who will be notified today.

Courteous Kate Surprised When Lawyers Read the Will

LONDON (AP) — Politeness among shop girls received a stimulant recently when it was announced that Miss Susan Plomer of Hornsey, who died some weeks ago, had willed an annuity of $450 to Miss Kate Wenham, an employe of an Oxford street department store, "in recognition of many courtesies received at her hands."

Miss Wenham had waited upon Miss Plomer in the store during the last ten years, but had no idea that her customer was wealthy.
