Artistic Worth Of Modern Dress

(By Marjorie Maguire)

To Grand High School Student: For many years there has been a gradual but determined trend towards the simple, graceful and sensible type of dress. This season finds us enjoying not only what that trend has at last attained, but in addition we may safely say that we have art as well as style in the apparel which is offered and that since the days of the Greeks have women been afforded the privilege of grace and simplicity as found in the modern wardrobe of the discerning woman. The tunic with its straight or circular line is a simple, natural line. The one-piece slip-on is a type of dress which will remain in the accepted list of fashions for doubtless a long and well-earned period. Hats are worn and not perched on top of coils of hair, weighted with pins, combs and ornaments. Women have decided to be comfortable and sane in her dress. The waisting-measuring 75 inches is a thing of the past; we would never have it return. The skirt which cleaned the floor or the sidewalk with its five yards of width has likewise been relegated to the junkheap; likewise the face and three petticoats with their many dust-catching ruffles. Should we not now be very thankful to be living in such an age?

The fact that some are wearing almost nothing has little to do with the care of sane, sensible women, who, having lived and observed, realize that there are always the extremists who would tear every progressive thing; designers who would tear down every bit of constructive building that they who tear down are placing a feeling game and I have faith in the real women and in the real men of this age, and there are a plenty.

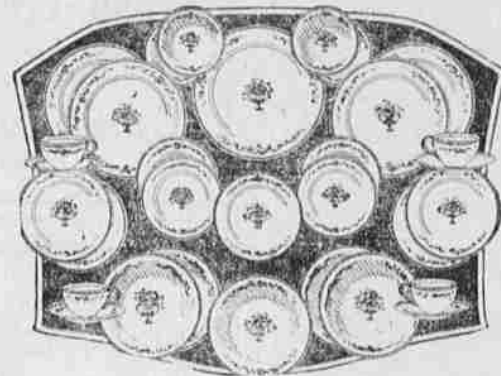

THE HOOSIER HIGHBOY

To the Hoosier Highboy belongs the distinction of being the finest and most complete kitchen cabinet ever designed. It furnishes an expanse of work-space and a storage capacity unequalled in any other model—15% more than in the average size. The roomy upper shelves—wide enough for a full-size dinner plate—are an exclusive Hoosier feature. In height, flush with the average door casing and with other proportions equally imposing, this Highboy model lends to the kitchen the fine dignity and substantial beauty of furniture specially designed. And it is particularly effective when used in conjunction with the other Hoosier Units, making a room uniform in finish; and design completely, handsomely furnished to the last detail! It has so many conveniences, too, not possible to get in a cabinet of smaller size—the lower section double doors, completely fitted with air-tight crystal jars for bulk foods, and special trays for egg-beaters, potato-mashers and those small odd pieces that never seem to have a niche of their own. This model finds its ideal use, of course, in larger kitchens, on the farm or in city homes of greater size.

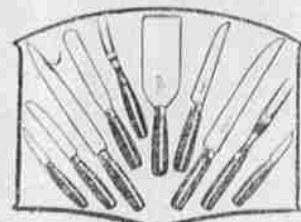

We have also various other styles of Hoosier Cabinets on which the same liberal special offer applies, as long as they last.
