OUTBURSTS OF EVERETT TRUE

Sills Says "Luck" Led Him to Fame.

Lady Luck was a factor in bringing Milton Sills the biggest role of his screen career—that of "The Sea Hawk," Sills, who is co-featured with Doris Kenyon in "I Want My Man," at the Arcade theater, is frank to admit it.

"I had heard that Frank Lloyd was getting ready to make 'The Sea Hawk' and had long been wishing to play the role on the screen," said Sills. "I finally concluded that I was not to be the lucky one."

"One day I was playing handball on the courts of the Los Angeles Athletic club when someone slapped me on the back. It was Lloyd.

"I didn't know you were such a big man, Milt," he said. "You know I've been wanting you and Wally Beery for parts in 'The Sea Hawk,' but I was afraid you were too small for Wally or Wally would be too big for you. It's lucky I came across you here."

And had it not been for that incident Sills is certain he would not have found himself playing the leading role in a film play that scored one of the greatest successes of screen history.

"I Want My Man," a First National, promises to be a big hit, but of an entirely different type. It was adapted by Earl Hudson from Struthers Duff's sensational novel, "The Interpreter's House," and draws a vivid contrast between war and pre-war days.

"Pampered Youth" At Sherrys Today And Tomorrow.

Superior photography is promised among other alluring features in Vitagraph's "Pampered Youth," the pietization of Booth Tarkington's great novel, "The Magnificent Ambersons," at Sherrys today and tomorrow.

The assurance is made doubly certain when it is said that the men who had charge of the photography for this picture are the ones who wielded the cameras in "Captain Blood," the super-spectacular which was the work of the same producer, David Smith.

The photography of "Captain Blood" was everywhere recognized as of the highest possible order. Some critics went so far as to say that in that great photoplay the pictorial side had no equal in any other of present film successes. It was because of that voice of approval, unanimously lifted, that Mr. Smith determined to re-engage his photographic artists.

"Pampered Youth" deals with a family living in a small interior city, who take great pride in the display of their wealth. The Ambersons spent small fortunes on their buildings, both inside and out, and "went in" for magnificence rather than taste and harmony. With all their splendor the soul in the picture are sometimes beautiful and the clear mind, deft hand and artistic judgment of expert cameramen were required to translate all their beauty to the screen. Hence "Pampered Youth," according to all accounts, is as pic-

When people come for 60 miles and haul by truck lumber and shingles, paint and oil, etc., from the Pratt Lumber Co., common sense will tell you that they are not doing it for their health. Farmers, look, here! I have about 200 8-ft. tamarack fence posts, 15c each. We have some good 1 1/2 inch rough lumber for fencing. If you want to screen in your back porch, come and measure up our odd screens—cheap as dirt.
