

TREATY WOULD SETTLE ROWS

WASHINGTON (AP)—In view of the many boundary disputes among various Latin American states still awaiting solution, two proposed treaties have been drawn up by the Institute of International Law which, if agreed to and ratified by all the 21 republics of this hemisphere, would assure the solution of all such problems on a peaceful basis and with a minimum of friction.

Any question like the Tacna-Arica dispute between Chile and Peru, recently arbitrated by President Coolidge, would fall in the category covered by these two draft conventions and the machinery provided by them would be automatically set in motion to reach some solution.

The conventions are two of 20 worked out by the Institute under a resolution passed at the fifth Pan-American congress held at Santiago in 1923, and form part of the general program of the codification of public international law as applied to the American republics.

These particular treaties, together with the other 17, will come up for discussion at the International Jurists conference to be held in Rio de Janeiro some time this year.

One of the treaties fixes rules of behavior for the countries among which a territorial dispute exists, while the other is a set unsolved. The other specifies the steps which shall be taken to reach a settlement.

Under the first treaty the disputants shall seek, either by direct negotiation or by the good offices of some friendly authority, a "modus vivendi" in the disputed zone which "shall permit the interests of parties to exercise police power, care for the hygiene, and insure public tranquility in the said zone." Should the interested parties be unable to agree on a "modus vivendi," then it is stipulated that neither shall exercise, without settlement of the question, any acts of sovereignty which might be prejudicial to the interests of the other, but that both shall respect any sovereign acts performed before the dispute arose. Among other minor provisions, it is also stipulated that if a disputed zone should change hands as a result of the settlement, the country losing sovereignty shall be indemnified by the other for any public works already constructed.

The second treaty is based upon the Hague convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

The treaty provides that as soon as a dispute shall arise the good offices of friendly powers shall be invited to try and arrange some settlement. Should this action bear no good results, then a commission of inquiry shall be set up, on the understanding, however, that "the findings of the commission will be considered as reports upon the dispute which were the subject of the investigation, but will not have the value or force of judicial decisions or arbitral awards."

The commission itself will consist of two members, "all nationals of American states, appointed in the following manner: Each government shall appoint two at the time of consultation, only one of whom shall be a national of its country. The fifth shall be chosen by common accord by those already appointed and shall perform the duties of president.

A period of six months after the publication of the commission's report is allowed for the disputants to agree to a settlement, after which "the parties in dispute shall receive entire liberty of action to proceed as their interests may dictate." While the commission is investigating, however, "none of the parties shall begin mobilization or concentration of troops on the frontier of the other, nor engage in any hostile act or preparations of hostilities."

Should friendly arrangement fail to be reached even after the publication of the commission's report the dispute may be submitted to the chief executive or one of the American republics who shall act as "friendly compositor" and ren-

Captured Flag Is Returned

After 60 years in strange hands, an old battle flag of the Tenth Louisiana Regiment, captured at Cold Harbor by the Eleventh Connecticut Regiment in 1864 has been returned by its captors to New Orleans and placed in Memorial Hall. Captain James Dinkins, youngest Confederate officer of that rank, is shown receiving the tattered banner from Commander Ira R. Wisman of Connecticut.

der an award. Finally, should this last attempt at conciliation fail, the matter may be referred to the permanent court of international justice at the Hague "or to any other court of justice which may be constituted for this purpose by the American republics."
