Philippines' Governor Aids Non-Christians

MANILLA (AP)—Governor General Wood has given instructions that natives of the non-Christian provinces, such as those inhabited by Moros in Mindanao and by Igorotes in the mountain province, be given preference in the matter of filling positions in the public service.

In a letter to the director of the Bureau of Non-Christian Tribes, Ludovico Hidrofolo, the governor general says there has been a tendency to employ other than natives in the government service in non-Christian provinces. He points out that the new policy should lead to more contentment among the non-Christians and result in substantial benefit to those people. The governor general's letter says:

"There is one policy I want you to carry out permanently and energetically and that is, the employment to the greatest extent possible of natives in the various offices and activities of the non-Christian provinces. There is often a tendency to employ other than natives. In pushing forward the development of these provinces we must do all we can to train natives of the provinces to fill the various positions in the service."

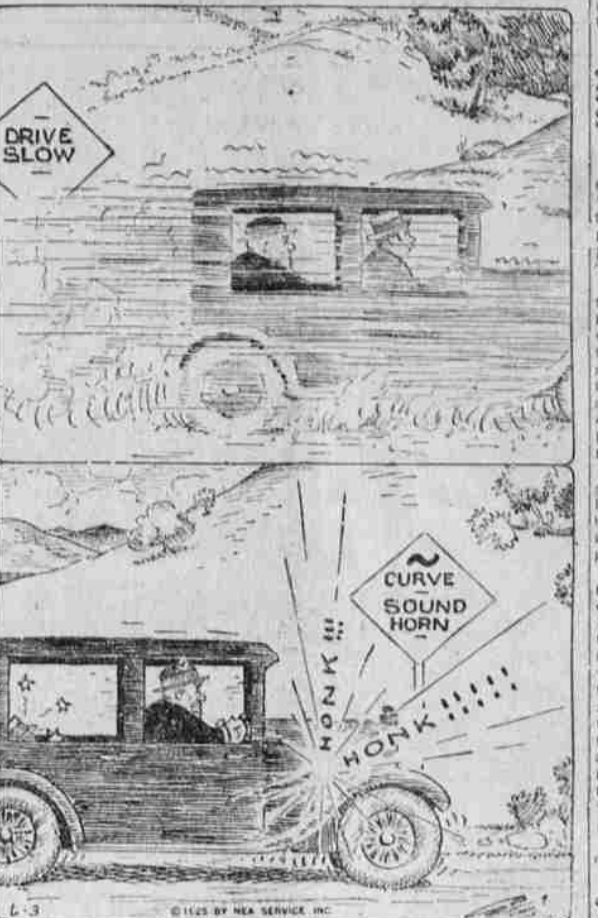

County to get Auditor.
OREGON CITY, Or.—George P. Johnson, formerly head of the water collection department of Oregon City, will take over the duties of the county auditor. Legislation provided for the establishment of the office of county auditor for Clackamas county, but the act designated that the new officer should be appointed in December, 1925, and should take office January 1, 1926.

This provision conflicted with the situation in the county, however, as Cenda J. Ham, expert accountant, completed an audit of the county's books this spring and installed a new control bookkeeping system which must be maintained through the office of the county auditor. The county court appointed Mr. Johnson, who will rate as head bookkeeper until there can legally be an auditor.

Primitive Gold Mining Pictured In "Idaho."

Bringing to the screen a series of events that happened during the gold rush days in the Idaho territory, was the task that confronted Director Robert Hill and Producer C. W. Patton, the men who were responsible for the actual filming of "Idaho," a new Pathé serial, episode two of which will be shown at the Sherry theater, matinee only.

Before the actual filming of the picture could be started a great deal of careful research work was necessary on the part of the production staff.

It will no doubt be of interest to know of the crude methods that were used by the early gold miners. The manner of getting gold out of the creek beds was particularly primitive, owing to the lack of adequate facilities on the part of the miners. The big idea was to get the gold before somebody else could get it, and consequently, the crudest methods were resorted to. The mining operations took place along the small water courses of the region. Water was indispensable in the crude placer operations of the early pioneers. When they could not use the actual current of the stream to separate the particles of gold from the soil, they diverted the stream into ditches and sluices. The sluices were long troughs, fitted together end to end, like the pipe. Across the bottom of the sluices were the riffle bars or partitions nailed to the bottom boards. The material dug from the claim was thrown into the high end of the sluices. The current carried down the muck, and the gold being heavier, settled to the bottom and was caught against the riffle bars.

The struggles of these hardy men, their differences and thrills depicted in this fine serial. It is a graphic picture of one of the most interesting periods of American history and the story might well have come from the master pen of Bret Harte.

Another Denny Picture Coming to The Arcade.

Reginald Denny, whose work in "Sporting Youth," "The Reckless Age," "The Aghastful Brute" and other Universal successes has established him on a high plain in the opinion of motion picture fans, stars in "Oh, Doctor!" the Universal serial to be shown at the Arcade theater next Thursday.

Screen version of the Saturday Evening Post serial of the same name written by Henry Lewis Ward, "Oh, Doctor!" is a delightful combination of comedy, humor, satire and romance, telling the story of a hypochondriac, who finally, because of love for his beautiful nurse, becomes transformed into a young man of such decided action that the hazards he engages in become a source of consternation to those who have his interests at heart.

Denny takes the part of the young hypochondriac, Rufus Billups, Jr., who worries about the state of his health to the exclusion of every other interest in life. The nurse is played by Mary Astor and others who are in the cast are Iris Barlin, William Blum, Tom Hicketts, Lucille Ward, Mike Tomlin, Clarence Gledhill, Blanche Payson, George Kuwa, Martha Mattox and Helen Lynch. Harry Pollard, who directed Denny in "Sporting Youth" and "The Reckless Age," directed "Oh, Doctor!" in the latter sequence of Jack Pickford Film Showing at Sherrys Today.

Not even the most credulous person would look for the end of the world to begin in a small country town, yet that is exactly what happens in Jack Pickford's new photoplay, entitled "Waking Up the Town," at Sherrys.

Practically all of the action in this picture takes place in a thriving little country town, the provincial spirit of which does much to develop the story. There is a simplicity and realism expressed in the sets and locale which offers an interesting contrast to the elaborate costume plays that have been holding so important a place on the screen of late.

One distinction, however, must go to "Waking Up the Town." It boasts the most unusual set ever built—an astronomer's observatory in a tree-top forty feet above the ground.

Other sets include a garage so realistic that it stopped motorists on the highway; also the humble interior of the hero's home, contrasting with the elaborate mansion of the town banker, and also with the over-furnished quarters the hero established for his mother after routine amies upon him. In this set everything works by electricity, even the stairs. There are also the Rainbow Falls, and many beautiful exterior scenes graced by the magic touch of the camera.

The rustic simplicity of the picture give it an unusual charm.

Comely showing "The Job Dodger."

"So This Is London," Coming to Arcade, Is Not a Picture.

"So This Is London," with Lawrence O'Rourke as the star and a company on a par with that seen on Broadway will be the attraction at the Arcade theater, Wednesday night June 10th. It should prove the amusement event of the year in this city and according to Henry Duffy, the producer, the cast is the peer of any to appear in several seasons.

O'Rourke was the original star in this great George M. Cohan comedy when it was first staged on Broadway, and it should prove a real treat to see him in the characterization of Sir Percy Beauchamp, which he created with such distinction. He is an internationally known actor, and as "The Earl of Pawfoot" earned himself a reputation the country over. Robert Tom, who last starred in "The Cat and the Canary" will have an important part and the leading woman is Ivy Crane, former vaudeville headliner on the Orpheum circuit. She will be seen in the delightful and winning role of Lady Duckworth, which she is said to assume with fine dignity and winsomeness.

"So This Is London" is a comedy of delicious situations, keen wit and subtle humor. It has had tremendous vogue everywhere and has proved a great drawing card both in this country and the British possessions. It is laughable in the extreme without being ludicrous or absurd and is said to please every type of theater goer.

All babies, especially those not breast fed, need a little strained orange juice, preferably, or the juice of raw or canned tomatoes. At first 2 teaspoonful of either, diluted with the same amount of boiled water, are given once a day. The amount is increased gradually. By the time the baby is 9 or 10 months old he should be getting 2 tablespoonful daily. If canned tomato juice is given, it is removed from the tin and given to the baby as soon as the tin is opened.
