Boys' Parents Told That Fighting Natural, Inherent

It has been charged that modern youth has made no contribution to science. We offer the following amazing anatomical discoveries by way of refuting the charge:

The snake's hips.
The mosquito's eyebrow.
The whale's wrist.
The lion's knee.
The ebullient's ankle.
The goat's elbow.

The softest job in the world is keeping a record of the annual snowfall in South Africa.

No, Charles, noodle soup is not a brain food.

MOOSEHEADS, III. (AP)—The charge that the world needs more than anything else, an aggressive fighting attitude for the right, Mr. P. Adams, a bachelor who, as superintendent for the great Moose House for children, is raising 1,251 youngsters, believes that every father should buy a set of boxing gloves for his son and teach him to take care of himself with nature's weapons.

"Every parent has the fighting problem to contend with," Mr. Adams said. "It is with boys from eight to fourteen that the most trouble is experienced. According to the cultural speech theory of evolution the child goes through every stage that the race has experienced in its history. This means that the eight to fourteen year old boy is in the stage experienced by our savage ancestors. Fighting is natural.

"Three possible attitudes may be taken by parents. They may say that fighting is natural and what is natural is right. This theory quickly leads to absolutism, as impudence, and all of the other mischiefs of children in nature. To encourage the boy to fight is to encourage him to become a bully and to develop an aggressiveness that in later years will injure him.

"On the other hand, the father, or the mother, may take the other extreme, and forbid all fighting. These parents see the possible physical injury, but fail to see how injurious molly-coddle tendencies may be. How can the child become timid or aggressive if he is compelled to take the beatings which other children will inflict

I held her hand.

I held her hand, one night in June
Beneath a silver lover's moon.
Upon the wave-washed sand,
Her eyes like diamonds gleamed in mine.
My heart was filled with love divine.
The while I held her hand.

I held her hand; I spoke the word
That only waves and breezes heard,
And clouds of glory laid,
And there upon the beach's sand
I spoke a kiss, and held her hand—
Or she'd have slipped my toes.

Some chorus girls have lots of clothes,
Others don't even bring trunks.

Suppose someone turns a fellow's head, and the first thing he knows he's going back the other way.

Patriotism: God bless those who agree with me and about the rest.

Girls who begin painting at 12, frequently need "whitewashing" at 20.

You needn't take a man's advice to flatter him, just ask it.

"When you were a little girl you never had your head shingled, did you?"
"Oh, no, quite the reverse."

Hotel fees are much like a billiard room—they work better with a good tip.

Agreeing, old gracefully is merely a process of learning to enjoy your limitations.

He mistook his boots with honey, he did it all his life.
"Wasn't because he liked the taste?"
"It held them on his heels."

ETERNAL CITY BECOMES EXPENSIVE LIVING PLACE

ROME, (AP)—Some few christened Rome—Rome and New York being the most expensive cities in the world, according to official statistics. These cities are now the beginning of the busy year for living here steadily increased. During March, the price index increased almost three percent, and forecasts and statistics suggest that this popular vacation ground is a serious increase.

Travelers behind the busy days of a few years ago when Italy was famous for its cheap living costs, and smart that the skyrocketing prices force them to cover their out-of-pocket expenses and to alter their plans for further traveling.

But the heart of the increase is borne by the Romans who have to pay twice as much, and sometimes three times as much, as last year to maintain their homes. And when explanations are asked, the shopkeepers invariably answer smilingly: "It is the God's Will."

WATERFALLS POSSESS A BEAUTY and an enchantment which is enjoyed by even the least of the artistically inclined. Even savage Indian tribes revered the falls within their hunting grounds, and wove around them many beautiful legends. The falls here are on Doyle's Run, Browns Cove, western Canada.

when they learn that he will not fight back.

The wise parents assume that natural tendencies are good, but that they need guidance. The child should be studied and if too aggressive, restrained; if too timid, encouraged to stand up for his rights. Parents should never openly take sides, but should quietly teach their sons how to use their fists, and at the same time the dignity of peace. They should be taught to give a good account of themselves when necessary, and at the same time be impressed with the fact that they should never be aggressors, or fight for pleasure.

"As a matter of fact, very few boys went to fight and most fights result from the desire of other boys to witness a fight. Parents should teach their sons this and encourage them to use every honorable means to avoid fights. If the father cannot teach his son how to fight, he should employ someone who can. Lessons should, of course, be a private family affair, and the gloves should be used only at practice.

"In any case the parents should be agreed on a policy, so that one will not urge the child to fight while the other punishes and shames him for fighting."

The German-made motion picture presented here at the Arcade at a private showing some months ago is recalled to mind by the discovery in England that not one celluloid drama is now in the course of preparation in that country, American pictures having such popular demand in British theaters that producing is a hazardous enterprise not attractive to English capital. Although the German picture shown here was original and different in that it lacked all sub-titles and let the pictures tell the whole story, it was not of a character that promises very keen competition for American productions. As originators and exploiters of the picture industry, American producers have established a leadership that will hardly be threatened in any other country. The increasing devotion to detail of staging and location that takes large companies and tremendous equipment over thousands of miles to get such surroundings as Wallowa offers is entirely foreign to an English or German producer's imagination. And it is doubtful if their viewpoint can be altered. Foreign films of unusual novelty are all that we can anticipate as an invasion of this industry that has become so purely American.

GAIN IN HIGHER SCHOOLING

From public and private schools 300,000 American boys and girls are graduating this commencement season, while the colleges and other higher institutions are losing 50,000 in the country. Something of the progress which a generation has witnessed is shown in a comparison with 1890 when there were about 40,000 high school graduates and less than 9,000 college degrees. This difference in numbers measures the advancement of higher education in one generation. It is proof of the increasing desire for scholastic training and the ability of those having such ambition to meet the demands. It is a fact well known to those who have been called on to finance a college education that the cost now is several times what it was in the period around 1890, yet there are more than five times as many young men and young women receiving degrees. Tuition is much higher, cost of living is far greater and the incidentals are vastly more numerous than when the parents went to school. Possibly the proportion of those eager for college training is not greater but the ability to secure it certainly is more widely diffused.

The greater number of high school graduates, especially those from the public schools, does not imply so much in the way of expense, though the numbers indicate that there is less disposition to take children out of school and put them to work before the course is completed. This of itself is evidence of bettered financial conditions. A greater proportion of the parents are able to do without the earnings of their children than formerly. Thus the situation is indicative not only of a better trained youth but also of a more substantial parenthood than existed a generation ago. The success of democracy depends on intelligence and it is a guarantee of stability that higher schooling is increasing in such degree.
