FIVE FACTORS CONTROL MOST POTATO DISEASES

Five factors are essential to prevention and control of potato diseases in Oregon—crop rotation, seed selection, seed treatment, plant spraying, and good storage. These practices are outlined by the experiment station potato specialists, who also list the following as minor factors of control: Kind of fertilizer used, cultural methods, checking of insects that spread disease, and use of irrigation water. The first five practices are most to be depended on. All of them must be considered if the grower is to produce potatoes of high yield and good quality free of potato diseases. Results at the experiment station in Corvallis show that more than one of these methods are necessary, and that two or more—such as rotation and seed selection—must be employed on each lot successively grown.

NEW WARFARE ON SQUIRRELS

with what is known as a duster, commonly used in fighting garden pests. Where there is more than one opening in the hole, the white cloud of poison may appear as far as twenty feet away through another opening. Each method is equally effective, but the duster results in a considerable saving of material.

In the tests during the past two days both methods were used. The most striking effect of the poison was observed on ground hogs which are commonly said to be quite difficult to kill with any means, from poison to clubs. After a dose of the cyanide material, however, the ground hogs were dead in less than a minute. Probably the most important use of the poison, if it proves effective, will be the fighting of pocket gophers for which no generally successful method has been in force up to date. Gophers treated yesterday were found dead just inside the open hole.

You Shipped Here. One ton of the material is being shipped to the county agent here by the California Cyanide company at Los Angeles distributed at cost through the county. It is believed that it will materially assist in making a final clean-up of the squirrels which do not take poison grain but satisfactorily at this time of year.

This is the time of the year college graduates worry about how much money bricklayers make. It takes two to start a fight, but only one to finish it.
