Would Link Rock Paths With Mormon Trails

LAKE ARROWHEAD, Calif. (AP)—Curious old rock trails recently discovered near here have caused the State Historical society to launch an extended research into the routes of early day highways in the belief that the evidences found are those of the lost Mormon trails which more than a half-century ago connected Utah with the Pacific southwest.

More than 60 years ago San Bernardino, 22 miles south of Lake Arrowhead, was a Mormon village, planned after Salt Lake City, and to the southwest ox-carts creaked their picturesque way along the monotonous journey.

What is now known as Lake Arrowhead was at that time a rugged, mountainous section with rushing streams. The lost trails are believed to have traversed this section. With the coming of settlers, the mountain streams were stemmed and Little Bear lake came into existence. Later a huge earth-filled dam of 1,300 feet wide at the base, with a capacity of 775 acres of water, created Lake Arrowhead.

In the virgin forests of oak, cedar and fir surrounding the present lake, old roads wind through the trees to the water's edge where they disappear, to emerge again on the opposite side of the lake.

The historical research workers believe these trails once traversed the former mountain slopes and merged with the old Arrowhead trail in the desert, near Victorville and Hesperia.

Offtimes silence is the sounding board of wisdom.

Wild Ponies of West Put to Economic Use In Fattening Hogs

OLYMPIA, Wash. (AP)—The apparent success of an experiment in converting horse flesh into hog feed has given rise to the hope among eastern Washington stockmen that a practicable means has at last been found to rid Washington ranges of thousands of worthless wild horses, declares Harold Ibbyns, field leader for the biological survey, who returned recently from a coyote hunting trip in Benton county. Cattle men and wool growers have long considered the horses a menace to the livestock industry, since the animals, described locally as "knothead cayuses," place an added burden on the none too abundant range.

In recent months, Mr. Ibbyns said, an enterprising individual has established a slaughterhouse and hog feeding plant at Plymouth, on the southern border of the Horse Heaven country, long famous as its name implies as a horse range. The horses are purchased at an average price of about $5 a head, which while low, enables the owners of the long neglected ponies to realize a profit by rounding up their otherwise valueless animals, and the supply has so far kept pace with the demand.

The slaughterhouse is modern in every respect, Mr. Ibbyns said, and none of the carcass is wasted. The flesh is cooked with corn and other cereals for hog feed, the hides being about $2 each, or nearly the cost of the horse, while the bones are disposed of to fertilizer plants at a price said to average $15 a ton. The hogs are shipped in, fattened and then reshipped to the markets. Approximately 600 hogs are fed at a time, while there is always a supply of horses awaiting slaughter in the corrals. When the supply of cheap horse flesh is exhausted at Plymouth, the slaughterhouse will be dismantled and moved to other fields, it was pointed out.

The horses are said to be descended partly from old range bands built up by the "horse kings" in the days when light horses could be raised at a profit, and partly from Indian bands. The stock has run down until very few of the horses are of use even as saddle animals.

While the hog feeding process promises to rid the range outside the Indian reservations of worthless ponies, no such relief is in sight for the areas inside the reservations. Plymouth was chosen as the site for the erection of the plant, largely because it was adjacent to the Yakima Indian reservation, where it is estimated that over 19,000 wild ponies range, much to the disgust of the wool growers who lease the land for grazing purposes. But the Indians, through sentimental attachment, absolutely refused to part with their ponies.

MARSHAL JOFFRE BETTER

PARIS, (AP) — Marshal Joffre apparently is coming back to normal health. He is suffering from what the physicians described as a mild attack of quinsy with a slight rise in temperature. One of the attending physicians said late Monday:

"He is perfectly all right, and there is nothing to worry about."

A doctor, who is a neighbor of the marshal's at Louveciennes and a close personal friend, remarked:

"He should be out and about within two or three days."

Sturdy Boas Celebrates Long and Useful Service

SOUTHAMPTON (AP)—The little Ketch Bee, built 124 years ago and still in service between Southampton and Newport on the Isle of Wight, completed recently her 38,000th crossing of the Solent channel. The Bee began her sea duty in 1801 and is one of the very few ships remaining from whose decks men witnessed a British naval victory at sea with Nelson on Board. During one period of her career she was commanded for 45 years by the same captain.

The Bee has been on the Isle of Wight run virtually all her existance up to the present time and, according to her loyal crew, she is good for many years yet to come. The little craft has carried more than 500,000 tons of cargo between the mainland and the Isle of Wight, covering something like 500,000 miles, although the distance between Newport and Southampton is but 18 miles.
