Cave Girl Methods Drive Timid Suitor From Altar

MEXICO CITY (AP)—Ines Vargas, a sixteen-year-old somerita as determined as she is romantic, recently served an ultimatum on her parents to the effect that, unless they gave their consent to her marriage with Pedro Covarrubias within ten minutes, she would throw herself from the roof of the four-story apartment building in which the Vargas family lived. Whereupon she fled upstairs, locked the door leading to the roof, and jumped herself on a cornice overlooking Nueva Mexico street.

Ciraco Vargas, the father, tore his hair in desperation for a few seconds as he reflected that his daughter had inherited the firm character of her mother, and the latter, he felt sure from past experience, would never recede from her stand that Pedro, as a son-in-law, was impossible. Then he dashed to the nearest police station, only a block away, to seek divine treatment.

A few hurried sentences explained the situation to comaristas. That official had an inspiration.

Next to the police station were the firemen. He called out a hook and ladder company and the fire ladders, all dressed up in huge helmets and light blue uniforms, clanged to the scene of the impending tragedy, unrolling a life net as they went. They arrived just about 5 minutes and 55 seconds after Ines had leaped her ultimatum and was about to launch herself into space. There ensued a lively game of tag between Ines on the roof and the firemen, with their net, down in the street, while a gathering crowd, cheered and cheered, attacked the locked door with an axe.

Just as the door gave way, Ines thought she had outwitted the net holders and jumped. By a supreme effort and overturning a couple of arches, the firemen managed to interpose enough of the net between Ines and the pavement to break her fall. But she achieved her purpose, for the sight of her daughter whirling through the air destroyed the last of Mamma Vargas' opposition. She did not, however, get down in the street.

ARMY PLANE DAMAGED

HOOD RIVER, Ore.—Men from Vancouver barracks began dismantling an airplane, brought down on a scrub oak hillside just west of the golf links of the Hood River Country club. The plane was piloted by Lieutenant Keris, with Jack Rohrer, Portland man, as a passenger, who with six other machines was returning to Vancouver barracks from the Princeton American Legion convention. Mr. Rohrer is a boyhood friend of Jack Houtledge, professional at the golf links, and the plane was driven low in order that he might wave a greeting. As the machine started up to clear the range west of the golf field, it struck a dead air pocket and began to settle. The pilot shut off his engine and glided into the brush. The propeller was shattered when it came in contact with an oak tree and branch penetrated the fuselage. Neither occupant of the plane was injured.

Tangent Factory Quota Signed

ALBANY, Ore.—With the pledging of milk from more than 250 cows in Benton county to the proposed cheese factory to be constructed by a cooperative association of dairymen at Tangent, it has been announced that the total production now necessary to insure success of one unit has been signed up. Accordingly, it is expected that within a few days the dairymen will take first steps toward actual construction of the first unit of the proposed factory. Mrs. Porter Slat of Tangent has offered to the associated dairymen, free of charge, a site for their plant on the Pacific highway at Tangent.

ever, win Pedro. That youth faded from the scene after witnessing his sweetheart's leap. The papers quoted him the next day as stating that he did not think he possessed enough of the cave man stuff to live happily with such a woman as Ines promised to become.

Tokio-Yokohama Canal Plan Revived by Japan

TOKIO (AP)—The plan for a deep waterway canal between Tokyo and Yokohama is to be revived, according to the Japan Advertiser, which states that the authorities of the department of home affairs are drafting a bill for presentation to the diet at its next session for the appropriation of 20,000,000 yen to be used in completing the project. It is expected the work will require about four years.

The plan for the canal was advocated several years ago because of the constantly expanding traffic between the port and the capital and because the transportation by water as it exists has been regarded as particularly inadequate of late years. Approximately 50 per cent of the merchandise landed at Yokohama from foreign and other Japanese ports must be transhipped for Tokyo and about the same percentage of the cargo consigned to Tokyo by train has to be forwarded to Yokohama. Of all the freight thus exchanged, only 10 percent can be transported by train.

For the purpose of transporting the remainder by water, railroads and lighters have been operated between the two points, but the constant delays and the damage frequently suffered in following the present crowded water routes render the traffic unsatisfactory to the shipper, it is said. In addition, the freight rates are out of proportion to the distance and the costs of the commodities thus exchanged have been advanced accordingly, it is claimed.
