La Grande Pirates to Play Bears Sunday

Whether or not his trickles will help him in a baseball game except, possibly, to steady the light in the sunshine, his length should be an advantage in maling high flies.

Buck Hein himself is due for a good day. He has been showing an unusual amount of enthusiasm in practice all week and should be right tomorrow.

The work of Paust and McKenna will be watched with interest. Theoretically both boys should show an improvement over last week. Actually if both keep up their high averages they are entitled to a good deal of credit.

Playing on a field which will be strange for the most part, before a crowd of home fans whom they will naturally try to do their best and with a team with whom they are still unfamiliar they will be handicapped to a certain extent. However there is no doubt but what both will play good games.

The game will start at 2:30 tomorrow afternoon.

SCHOOL TO START HERE ON TUESDAY

ers to put in displays around the room and a dozen or more of these will be in evidence, showing practical means of improving kitchen and home efficiency and convenience.

One of the big attractions of the school, to which all the women of the community are cordially invited by The Observer, will be afternoon prizes to be given away each day during the week. Two or three valuable prizes are to be awarded each day, the light & Power Co. donating the following to the prize list: Edison 5 lb. iron, Hotpoint curling iron, Universal tea urn, Universal white enamel curling iron, Universal Gell, and a grand prize of a Westinghouse Turn-over Toaster. In addition to this list the La Grande Milling Co. will donate to the list a sack of breadstuf flour each day, the La Grande Grocery Co. will give Preferred Stock Coffee, and other contributions yet to be made.

Mrs. Wassell, instructor, comes most highly recommended to La Grande and The Observer promises a week of most interesting programs. She will demonstrate on site instructs and an expert menu for each day will be outlined and prepared. Various methods of kitchen economy will be introduced so that the school should be of practical value to everyone in attendance.

MANY COMING INTO OREGON

TURNER OPERATOR ROBBED

TURNER, Ore.—Duncan Lewis, night operator at the Southern Pacific station here, was held up in his office by an unidentified negro, bound and gagged and carried from the depot by his assailant, who locked him in a box car and returned and letted the till. The proceeds of the holdup amounted to $13.25. Lewis was released from the car a number of hours later, when he was discovered by G. Alexander, who lives in the vicinity of the depot.

The negro arrived in Turner on a freight train visiting a number of stores and loitering around the town during the evening. He was armed with a small, nickel-plated revolver, Lewis stated.

Access to Union Station Wanted

SALEM, Or.—Alleging that the Northern Pacific Terminal company in Portland is discriminating in favor of the Tyrell Traps company, allowing access to the Union station to the exclusion of other sightseeing trip concerns, a complaint was filed against the terminal company by the Circle Tour Sightseeing company.

tives. The shop is equipped with large lathes and other necessary machinery.

All work at Maxville is under the superintendency of V. V. Church, logging superintendent.

Wallowa Mill

The Wallowa mill, which was purchased from the Nibley-Minnigh interests, has doubled its capacity since acquired by the Bowman-Hicks concern. About 300 men are employed, working in two shifts, receiving about $25,000 monthly.

New dry kilns, additional boiler power, a new planer and large drying sheds have been added as well as practically complete rebuilding of the sawmill proper.

Daily Cut

The daily cut of the mill at Wallowa, a single hand and cross mill, is about 125,000 feet.

At present the company is installing a new sorting rig in the planing mill there.

Running Two Shifts

The La Grande plant, at one time owned by the Palmer Lumber company, distributed over a large acreage, is also operating two shifts of men and the daily output runs about 250,000 feet. Approximately 400 men are employed here with an average monthly payroll of $20,000.

Since the property was acquired by the Bowman-Hicks company various improvements have been made, including installation of additional dry kilns, large drying sheds, additions to the boiler capacity and erecting of a sorting rig in the planing mill.

The Bowman-Hicks lumber mill, located at the northwestern limit of La Grande, is from the standpoint of equipment, the equal of nearly any plant in the northwest.

It is a self contained mill, power is developed, lights are generated and water is pumped by the plant itself with no dependence on outside sources.

Site 120 Acres

The mill site, including the logging ponds, contains 120 acres. On this the plant is located and storage capacity for the lumber and for the logs (the two log ponds) is provided.

The plant is divided into two main units which are in turn subdivided into several smaller divisions. These are the mill proper which cuts the logs and turns out the unfinished lumber and the building in which the planing machinery, the box factory, and the retail department are housed.

The mill proper is of the double hand type. Logs are conveyed into the mill from the pond on an endless chain, mounted on the two carriages and sawed into rough boards in a remarkably short space of time.

A great deal of the machinery in the mill is automatic in operation requiring but supervision in operation. Handling the lumber in the most efficient manner is necessary in order to keep up the volume of output.

Logs Utilized Thoroughly. Practically everything from the log is utilized with the exception of the sawdust which is disposed of in the huge burner. The bark and outside portions of the log are used for fuel. The trimmings are used for making lath.

The logs are cut into rough boards in the mill and into the proper lengths. The boards then pass out, on what is known as the green chain, much of the lumber from the green chain is loaded on trucks and stored in the yard while some of the higher grades are placed directly in the dry kiln.

Nearly all of the lumber ultimately reaches the planer. Here the rough boards are faced by a battery of planing machines. After leaving the planer most of the lumber is loaded into cars, while some is absorbed by the adjoining retail department and box factory.

The company has approximately one billion feet of lumber that hasn't been touched in the vicinity of Maxville which would insure the mills of a long run besides other courses.

The Bowman-Hicks company's general office headquarters are in Kansas City, Mo., with the general western offices in La Grande in charge of H. N. Ashby. Offices are also maintained at Wallowa and Maxville. R. D. Tanner is general superintendent of the mill here.
