Prominent Players in "Adventure," at Star.

The acting, alone, in "Adventure," the new Paramount picture, now showing at the Sherry Theatre is sufficient to lift this film out of the mediocre class. Which should occasion little wonder, since Victor Fleming, the producer, has assembled a formidable cast featuring such starling favorites as Tom Moore, Pauline Starke, Wallace Berry and Raymond Hutton. Even the minor parts are portrayed by players of skill and experience as witness Walter McGrath, Duke Ka-hanamoku, famous international Hawaiian swimmer, James Spencer and Noble Johnson.

This imposing array of screen talent is reinforced with a gripping story from the pen of the late Jack London, realistic settings gorgeous backgrounds, excellent lighting beautiful photography and the expert direction of Mr. Fleming who has a right to point to his latest production with considerable pride.

Those who are familiar with the works of Jack London, will recall "Adventure," as a South Sea tale, dealing with the stirring experience of a young plantation owner on one of the savage and remote Solomon islands, who is sided in his struggle against nature, cannibals and unscrupulous white men, by a mysterious and daring girl, who visits that out-of-the-way place in search of adventure.

There is action aplenty and thrills galore. The players have entered into the spirit of the story with a vim and a vigor that keeps things humming from the dramatic beginning to the fighting finish. Tom Moore has a role very much to his liking and gives a strenuous account of himself; Pauline Starke is a picturesque character as a woman soldier of fortune; Wallace Berry lightens his villainy with comely moments; and Raymond Hutton wins new laurels with his characterization.

"Adventure" is a real film treat! Make it a point to see it!

Big Fight Scene in "Fear Bound" At Sherrys.

The "why" of a First Aid room in connection with a motion picture studio—a question that has often been asked, was answered when Vitagraph's "Fear-Bound," a Will Nigh production, was being made. "Fear-Bound," at Sherry's has a scene which in the making resulted in bumped heads, bruised noses, blackened eyes and scratched fists.

It's the greatest fight ever filmed, according to all accounts—the last word in realism. And it isn't two gladiators meekly, but half a dozen, who act as if they were out for blood—and get it.

The story is about a timid boy whose father and brothers are bandits and who, because of his timidity, is heartily persecuted by them. But the sister has faith in him, and her very devotion finally gives him confidence in himself.

"Chickie" With Big Cast Coming To Arcade.

Dorothy Mackall, who is "Chickie" in the First National picture of the same title, which comes to the Arcade Theatre Friday and Saturday, hailed from England a few years ago with a determined effort to break into the American theatrical world. She was a hair-ripped, beautiful child of sixteen summers, with a wealth of long blonde hair.

His Zelig, that arch comonomer of the beautiful in woman, picked young Dorothy for the part. Her hair was her crowning glory.

Then came an opportunity for Dorothy to get into pictures, and before long the frightened young English girl was a star. Ask her today what was her chief asset in reaching the top, and she will tell you it was her hair.

When First National brought Dorothy East to play the titular role in "Chickie," which was made by one of the East Hudson units in New York, Director John Francis Dillon threw a thousand fits when he realized Dorothy had long hair.

"You can't wear your hair long in this picture," Dillon fairly screeched. Dorothy tried to argue him out of it. She would get a hairdresser to fix her hair so that it would appear to be bobbed. But Dillon was adamant. The shears or nothing.

Dorothy cried a little but finally gave way. A hurried call was sent to the most artistic "bobber" at the Fitz Carlton. In an hour he was at the studio, and fifteen minutes later Dorothy's tresses were off.

Tiny Handwriting Forms Part Of British Empire Exhibition

VICTORIA, B. C. (AP)—John Spears who lives at Cowichan Bay on Victoria Island recently presented the British Empire Exhibition at Wembley with a unique collection of handwriting specimens. He claims the all-around championship in miniature writing with pen and pencil.

Spears has written 12,125 words on the back of a postcard with an ordinary pen and the naked eye, and the Lord's Prayer on a space 60 larger in area than the end of a lead pencil. He also has written a book of 50 pages totaling 10,000 words, each page about the size of a postage stamp.
