Ledbetter, Observer pitching coach, held the Clerks at bay last night while his teammates scored enough runs to win their third consecutive game in the Twilight League.

The game took on the aspect of a pitcher's battle with Ledbetter whiffing 10 and allowing but three hits. Hosenbium, throwing for the Clerks, struck out six and was touched up for five mistakes.

Only a bad start is keeping the Detroit Tigers from being a serious menace. Cobb's club has finally struck its stride.

ROCKNE'S SECRETS. For a number of years Knute Rockne famous football coach of Notre Dame, has conducted summer schools in grid coaching in various sections of the country.

Only recently he graduated 125 budding football instructors in the art of turning out championship teams.

While Rockne's pupils and players have had much success in teaching football to others, we find few of them turning out elevens that compare with the products of Notre Dame.

This makes it seem that the famous Knute is keeping a few of his secrets in football strategy.

No doubt the brilliant Mr. Rockne believes it is always well to have something in reserve for the pinch.

SERIOUS HANDICAP. Short fences are a serious handicap to a big league pitcher.

"Bullet Joe," as he was named because of his burning speed, has worked under such a restraint during most of his big league career.

At the Polo Grounds and the Yankee Stadium in New York, limited playing territory in right and left fields, was always a menace to a pitcher.

Now that he is with St. Louis the short right field stands at the task of the pitcher all the more difficult.

A home run there is often just a lay-by.

"The Washington park is the ideal field to pitch on," says Bush. "There the pitcher can work on the batter without feeling that a slight slip in control may prove costly."

Short fences and a lively ball have certainly made the going much tougher for the major league pitchers.

Web of Underground Oil Lines Represents Half Billion Dollars

CHICAGO (AP)—The transcontinental underground web of pipe lines that silently supplement the surface feeding of industry, has been developed into an oil carrying system that is comparable with the expansion of the railroads after the Civil war.

A network of more than 65,000 miles of two to twelve-inch pipes touch both coasts and spread this mid-continent, connecting the oil fields with refineries and industrial plants in distant sections of the country.

This system is estimated to represent an investment of $515,000,000 in the United States.

One of the largest companies figured that if the work of transporting the oil were taken over by the railroads tomorrow, it would require two million tank cars, in addition to 10,000 locomotives, to handle it.

Three main or "trunk" lines join the central and western fields with the Whiting, Indiana, refineries, and two of these continue to the Atlantic seaboard.

The trunk line connects the Salt Creek, Wyoming, and Elk Basin region with this line at Princeton, Mo.

The system is made up of dozens of trunk lines, tapped by gathering lines or feeders. If all these trunk and gathering lines were connected in one line they would reach three times around the earth.

The most recent addition was the 1,400-mile line from Teapot Dome to Chicago, via Kansas City. More than 500,000 barrels of oil are required to fill this line, which carries a "frozen liquid capital" figured at $300,000,000.

The trunk lines are of eight and twelve-inch pipe, while the gathering lines range from two to six inches. The pipes are laid three feet underground.

Oil is forced through the pipes by powerful pumps, located 20 to 50 miles apart along the line. The oil moves at a speed of three or four miles an hour, depending upon the contour of the country and the viscosity of the petroleum.

Building and laying of the pipe lines is similar to the construction of the railroads. Reconnaissance parties make the survey, the pipe layers string the pipe along the ground and when the shallow ditch has been dug, usually by machine, it is ramed into place.

Under favorable conditions, a crew of 40 men can lay a mile of pipe a day. The right of way, telegraph and telephone lines and sufficient acreage for pumping sites are obtained by the purchase of "easements." In some states the right of way may be obtained by condemnation proceedings.

The power which the pipe lines hold has caused them to be defined as public carriers, and as such are under strict government regulation. The holders of the largest systems are Prairie Pipe Line company, with 16,772 miles, representing an investment of $58,478,000; the Sinclair company, with 5,732 miles, representing an investment of $21,552,000; the Bixby company with 6,455 miles, representing $21,775,000, and the National Transit company, with 3,342 miles, representing $16,531,000.

The operation of a pipe line is continuous. Every day in the year the oil flows steadily. The pumping stations are all connected with communication wires. Road men daily inspect the lines for leakage.

The quantity of oil handled by the lines is more than 400,000,000 barrels annually, transported over a distance ranging from a few miles up to 1,400. They bring 150,000 barrels daily from the eastern and midcontinental fields to the Atlantic seaboard.
