Physical and Labor Problems Many In Spitzbergen Mining

LONGYEAH CITY, Spitzbergen (AP)—Mining in Spitzbergen presents peculiar features that are not met with anywhere else in the world.

It is a long tramp from Longyear City to the mine entrance across a huddle-straw valley between two snow-covered mountain ranges.

Working gains are limited in open cable cars 800 feet up at an angle of some 45 degrees to the main gallery, which opens out to the mountainside and looks down below like an ugly black bear.

From here, galleries run horizontally through the heart of the mountainside, with an incline on the other side.
