rights to surrounding oil lands, wanted to drill a well on the main corner of the town. The townpeople objected and the oil company filed suit to wipe out the entire town. Layove fought it through the courts until his funds were exhausted.

Then the twosome took up the fight. Appeals were made to Washington without avail.

Finally Federal Judge T. Blake Kennedy, who decided that the town belonged to Harry Sinclair, decided that the town is to be vacated.

Revolt Was Feared. The decision stirred the oil fields almost as quickly as the old one, but it is much cleaner and more attractive than Old Layove. But there isn't a derrick in sight, and the ground on which the new town stands is as yet worth nothing compared to the riches which underlie Old Layove.

Meanwhile, at Old Layove, "black gold" continues to come from the earth, but its founder is getting no share of the treasure.

The fight is over, but it has left bitter scars that may cause unrest in the oil fields for many years.

(Continued from Page One.) newspaper. A few of the facts about the history of this interesting man from eastern Oregon roped out yesterday afternoon in the lobby of the Imperial, where he is a guest, and it came to light that it was he, for years a stage driver, who piloted President and Mrs. Harding from the station to the speaker's stand when they were west July, 1923, and stopped for the celebration at Meacham.

Another treasure is a letter Mr. Woods had with him yesterday written by Bruce Dennis, formerly of the La Grande Observer, which runs as follows: "The hear-

Mr. Woods started driving in 1878 and had been at it steadily since until a few years ago, when he retired. When stages went out in eastern Oregon he drove for six seasons at Yellowstone park. He was in Portland yesterday on his return from Salem, where he judged the six-horse team in competition in the horse show at the state fair.
