RATE CASE EXPLAINED TO CLUBMEN

crease in short haul rates. "We have the upper hand, however, inasmuch as the commission examiner recommended that the request be refused when he turned his report into the commissioners' hands," he said.

In summing the situation up, Mr. Ford said that the entire matter is simply a battle by interior points to have continued a rate that is not higher than the rate charged on longer hauls to coast points. He said that the railroads' plea that the request be granted because of the empty car traffic and the water competition through the Panama canal, represent little, declaring that if the water transportation was divided among northern lines, it would be "but a drop in the bucket."

He indicated that the manufacturers and shippers in the Chicago territory, embracing a considerable area, are practically forcing the railroads to make these demands, in an effort to compete with western manufacturers and with eastern shippers who secure low transportation rates by shipping via the Panama canal, and tax the people of the inland Empire in order to carry out their business successfully.

Preliminary to Mr. Ford's speech, several reports were made by committee members and Hugh E. Brady requested the chairman of commerce to endorse the Armistice day celebration. This latter was referred to the merchants committee for consideration.

The meeting was presided over by Fred Kiddle and was opened when O. W. Jones returned thanks.

Farmers Anxious for Rain
LEBANON, Ore.—Linn county farmers are anxious for rain to help start the grain that has been sown this fall. Farmers are well along with their fall work, but the grain growth has been slow. The streams of the county are lower than for many years.

Doesn't Mind Price of Furs

The high price of furs doesn't bother Mrs. John Andrews in the least. Mrs. Andrews lives in the wild Queets River country in Washington, and when she wants a new fur she goes out and shoots the animal herself. The wildcat over her shoulders is the latest victim of her high-powered rifle. In addition, Mrs. Andrews makes enough on beaver and pelts to buy all her clothes.
