The Garden

HYACINTHS FOR THE GARDEN
 Hyacinths, favorite subjects for the house during late winter and early spring, are altogether too much neglected in the garden where they scatter fragrance over the entire garden in late April and early May. Hyacinths are as hardy and easy to grow outdoors as tulips and daffodils, but somehow this fact does not seem to be well known and many people regard the hyacinth as purely a house plant. It is even finer outdoors. A group of half a dozen will give scent to the premises. The single hyacinth is better for outdoor planting than the double sort. Only the Roman hyacinths are tender, and should be planted outside. There are special grades of bedding hyacinths for

Message No. 49, From: OREGON TRAIL FOX FARM, H. W. Smith, Prop., La Grande, Ore.

WHICH? A grain, stock, or fruit farm, or just a backyard fox farm? Your net profits for a 160-acre grain farm costing $16000 ranges from 4 to 12 per cent; a 25-acre fruit farm costing the same ranges from nothing to 25 percent. A stock farm of 160 acres fully equipped amounts to $25,000, and seldom nets you more than 10 per cent.

ONE PAIR OF SILVER FOX, costing $1,000, will within three years net you perhaps 150 per cent.

outdoor planting, but the finer named varieties will give finer bloom outside than they do inside. Hyacinths should be planted with about two and one-half to three inches of earth over the top of the bulb. Cover it with a light mulch of leaves and be sure to make a note to rake the mulch off bright and early next spring before the hyacinths get too far through the mulch. The bulbs will thrive either in sun or shade. They last longer if grown in the shadow of evergreens where the sun will hit them only part of the day. Hyacinth beds are particularly handsome in early spring and for these a single color is always most effective or groups of harmonizing colors such as white, pale yellow, pale blue, pink, then the deeper blues and reds. Very handsome effects are possible with hyacinths and nothing is finer so cut than a few heavy stalks of bloom. A few bulbs in some out of the way corner to be grown only for cutting will well repay the trouble of planting them.

Breakfast—Baked apples, cereal, thin cream, crisp whole wheat toast, milk, coffee.

Luncheon—Creamed oysters on toast, head lettuce salad, gingerbread with whipped cream, milk, tea.

Dinner—Roast pork, baked potatoes, cranberry sauce, creamed spinach, cabbage-celery-pepper salad, bran bread, orange cream pudding, milk, coffee.

Instead of the proverbial apple sauce with roast pork try cranberry sauce. You will like it quite as well and perhaps better. The course outer stalks of celery can be used in this cabbage and pepper salad. Crisp them well in cold water and juice or shred finely. The tender stalks can be saved and used for another meal just as plain "celery."
