"Charley's Aunt" Universal Farce At Sherrys—Today

The screen version of the internationally famous farce "Charley's Aunt" by Brandon Thomas will be the feature attraction at the Sherry Theatre for two days beginning today.

Several hundred girls participated in a beauty contest in Hollywood without being aware of it.

Two score of them, the loveliest in southern California, were winners. Their award was to appear in "The Coast of Folly" Gloria Swanson's new starring picture.

Alvin Brown, Paramount's noted producer-director, was the judge of the unusual contest.

As the hundreds of girls, summoned by the casting director, equipped about the studio grounds, Mr. Brown, standing aside unseen, supplied them for beauty, poise, manners and grace in wearing clothes.

One hundred of the girls were asked to remain. Then they realized that they had been entries in a beauty parade, all unknown.

Mr. Brown eliminated 60 of the 100 and the remaining 40 were taken to the Coronado Beach, famous southern California resort, for beach scenes of "The Coast of Folly."

The winners were averaged and the results provided the standard by which the ideal Hollywood girl for 1925 is to be judged.

The ideal beauty for this year is five feet and three inches tall, weighs 118 pounds, has golden-chestnut hair and grayish-blue eyes.

"The Coast of Folly" is a screen version of Coningsby Dawson's novel of the same title. Forrest Halley wrote the screen play. Anthony Jovitt, new "find" and who appeared in "The Little French Girl" and "The Lucky Devil" Dorothy Cummings, and Alec Francis are a few of the big names and it is said to be the funniest feature that the screen has offered this season.

appearing in support of the star. The picture opens at the Arcade Theatre next Thursday.

Star of Star Movie a Son of The Open Spaces

Art Acord, who is starring in "The Call of Courage," Universal-Struck Western that is to be screened at the Star Theatre commencing Thursday is not by any manner of means just a moving picture cowboy. The man whose work in pictures has thrilled millions and who has countless admirers, both male and female, has behind him the strenuous training of the range and the ranch, for he began his career as a cowpuncher.

The daring riding stunts that he enacts before the camera are only a part of his every-day work, and he is only postponing the hard-riding he did when he was herding cattle. Among cowpunchers Acord is considered one of the best men who ever sat in a saddle for he has competed with and won out against many of the greatest rough-riders in this country and Canada.

At the Kinloch-Balls Round-Up in 1912, Acord won the bronco-busting championship and rode second at the Pendleton, Oregon; Cheyenne, Wyoming, and Salt Lake City, Utah, roundups. From this it can be seen that any man who can do any one of these things has to know something of riding.

"In 'The Call of Courage,' Acord gives several splendid exhibitions of his horsemanship. As Steve Caldwell, he not only shows that he can handle the reins from the seat of a swaying stage coach, but that he has lost none of his cunning in the saddle. Whether it is driving before the sheriff's posse which is after him for a crime laid against him by his cousin, or whether it is dashing to the rescue of an imperiled child, Acord provides his audience with many a thrill.

In this most entertaining and gripping picture play the star rides his famous horse "Darkie" who is considered to be one of the most intelligent horses working before the camera. In "The Call of Courage," "Darkie" is seen in his famous knot untying act. "Darkie" is said to be the only horse now performing this wonderful feat.

The players supporting Acord are all old favorites. They include Olive Hasbrouck, Duke R. Lee, John T. Prince, Frank Rice, Turner, Savage, aged 5, and Floyd Shackleford. "The Call of Courage" was directed by Cliff Smith.

Because much of the picture mysteriously appears and disappears, making mackerel fishing fluctuating, the bureau of fisheries will study its movements and migration.

Palgrave Manor, George Washington's ancestral home in England, is to be restored and kept as a museum of Washington's life.
