La Grande Theatres

Colleen Moore Coming Here in
"We Moderns."

"Kick," "pop" and "jazz" stirred together, whipped into consistency and spread thickly over a plot full of love scenes and thrills—what a meaty fruit cake the new bill at the Arcade theater Wednesday and Thursday will prove to be!

If you would laugh, snicker, smile or chortle, see "We Moderns" at the playhouse with Colleen Moore at her best. That little whirligig of giggles and grimaces is back at it again—this time as a British prototype of the character who has made famous upon the American screen.

There is, incidentally, a world of worth-while sight-seeing in "We Moderns," the story of which is held in London. There the picture was made, and there the audience transported on viewing the moving panorama—perhaps the most gorgeous background with which a regular look picture ever has been supplied.

Miss Moore is surrounded by such universally liked talent as Jack Mullan, Carl Miller, Claude Gillinwater, Charissa S-Lwynn, Cissy Moore and others. The story, produced by John McCormick and developed under the direction of John Francis Dillon, readily shows the earmarks of June Mathis, master scenario, who gave the screen public such prime entertainment as "Four Horsemen" and "Blood and Sand."

"We Moderns" is a screen version of Israel Zangwill's novel of post-war frivolities in London society.

In addition to the above feature one of the ever popular Gang comedies will also be shown.

Mae Murray
Outdoes Self in
"The Merry Widow"

Mae Murray and originally are synonymous in the minds of motion picture theatregoers, who look forward with unusual interest to each new picture in which the big-ears little actress appears.

And Miss Murray keeps faith. But in "The Merry Widow," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture, at Sherry's Miss Murray's touch of originality is expressed in a totally different way. To be sure, it is evident in the costumes, her method of expression and dances just as surely as before, but it is also exerted in the character she creates as well. The story of the poor little chorus girl who arrives in Monte-Carlo as one of the members of a stranded theatrical troupe and instantly here becomes the richest woman in Europe, and in the end the Queen of the Country, given Miss Murray the best opportunity of her career, which she grasps to its fullest extent.

As well as the dancing, flashing creature theatregoers love so well, a new figure of heartfelt appeal in Miss Murray's portrayal of the little role. For all of her bizarre quality she has more human appeal than in some of her past pictures. The naturalness of the story, even with all its color and glamor, makes her characterization put a little harder on the heart strings. In portraying the difficult role, Miss Murray affords theatregoers a new insight into her histrionic ability.

"The Merry Widow" was directed by Eriq von Stroheim for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. The noted director made the adaptation and prepared the scenario with Benjamin Glazer from the famous stage play by Victor Leon, Leo Stein and Franz Lehár.

The prominent members of the significant cast include John Gilbert as Prince Danilo, Roy D'Arcy, Tully Marshall, George Fawcett, Josephine Crowell, Dale Fuller, Sydney Bracey, and many others. "Comely showing "High Hopes."

Love Foments
Fast Fistics in Hoxie Picture

Love is the greatest moving force in the Universe. In life and on the screen it causes men to perform feats of daring that their normal selves would shun. In "Two Fisted Jones," the Jack Hoxie starring vehicle at the Star theater, Wednesday and Thursday, Hoxie's impelling motive is a love for a rancher's daughter.

Without a bit of exaggeration and without being untrue to life it causes Hoxie to move through the fastest series of surprising action that this whirlwind Western star has ever essayed. He tries to find a man who never existed and instead bumps into a villainous plot against his new found sweetheart's father.

This starts him into action that does not belie his name of Two-Fisted Jones. Several hand to hand fights, a gun battle and feats of horsemanship seldom equalled on the screen are some of the action that Hoxie goes through in telling the story to a happy ending.

Edward Sedgwick, one of the best known directors, has charge of this picture and put all the delicate touches in it that has made him famous. Supporting Hoxie is Kathryn McGuire, a dainty incentive to all Hoxie's daring acts. Other members of the cast are William Steele, Harry Todd, William Walsh, Frank J. Blue, Byron Douglas, Frederick Cole, Ed Burns, Art Ortega and Tom Grimes. A two-reel comedy will also be shown.
